PREFACE

THE limited edition of this book was published in 1927 by the Nonesuch Press, and it is now reissued in accordance with an arrangement with the first publishers. The illustrations, appendices and notes have been omitted in order to bring the book within the purchasing power of a larger public. Some of the quotations from Blake's writings have been curtailed, and reference has been made to new material available since the appearance of the first edition. The brief summaries of the symbolic books are intended not for students of Blake, but for the general reader who has no notion of their contents: they may serve also as a first aid to new readers of these books. The symbolic writings have been treated in chronological order but in separate sections of the relevant chapter that those readers to whom Blake's symbolism makes no appeal may readily omit them.

I take this opportunity of repeating my acknowledgments to the work of other students of Blake, especially to Mr. Geoffrey Keynes' The Writings of William Blake (Nonesuch Press, 1925) and Bibliography, Mr. S. Foster Damon's William Blake: His Philosophy and Symbols, Mr. Joseph Wicksteed's Blake's Vision of the Book of Job, Dr. P. Berger's William Blake: Mysticism et Poésie, Mr. Arthur Symonds' William Blake, and Mr. A. G. B. Russell's Engravings of William Blake. I am indebted to Mr. Geoffrey Keynes and to Mr. G. M. Young for constant help and advice, and to Mrs. Colville-Hyde, widow of Captain Butts, the grandson of Blake's friend and patron, for generously putting at my disposal all her information about Blake's relations with Thomas Butts. I have also to thank Messrs. Macmillan, Messrs. Methuen, and Messrs. Heinemann for allowing me to quote at some length from The Life of William Blake by Alexander Gilchrist, from The Letters of William Blake, together with a Life by Frederick Tatham, and from William Blake, A Critical Essay, by Algernon Charles Swinburne, respectively, and the Trustees of the National Portrait Gallery for permitting the reproduction of Blake's life mask.

THE LIFE OF WILLIAM BLAKE

CHAPTER I

YOUTH

Whether on Ida's shady brow,
Or in the chambers of the East,
The chambers of the sun, that now
From antient melody have ceas'd,

Whether in Heav'n ye wander fair,
Or the green corners of the earth,
Or the blue regions of the air
Where the melodious winds have birth,

Whether on chrystal rocks ye rove,
Beneath the bosom of the sea
Wand'ring in many a coral grove, Fair Nine, forsaking Poetry!

How have you left the antient love
That bards of old enjoy'd in you!
The languid strings do scarcely move!
The sound is forc'd, the notes are few!

"In those lines," it has been said, "the eighteenth century dies to music." The singer of the dirge, William Blake, was born on 28th November 1757. We know nothing of his father's family, or even the maiden name of his mother, and it is idle to speculate on the hereditary sources of his genius. Many years after his death two ladies of the name claimed him as second cousin, and Admiral Blake as a common ancestor. Ellis and Yeats say that he was an Irish O'Neil whose grandfather had adopted his wife's name of Blake. Neither statement rests on any documentary evidence, and we should require an unassailable pedigree before we should believe that a man who described himself as "English Blake" was in fact Irish. Mr. Symonds has discovered the inconclusive but suggestive fact that eight other families of Blake were living in the parish of St. James, Westminster, within forty years. At the time of William's birth his father, James Blake, was a hosier in a fair fair way of business, living at 28 Broad Street, Golden Square, although he was a Nonconformist the child was christened on the 11th December at St James's Church, Piccadilly William, it would appear, was the second son James, the eldest, practical like his father, inherited the business, and took upon himself to proffer advice to William "My brother John, the evil one," the third and favourite son, lived to beg bread from William, thereby reversing their parents' prophecy he died young after a life of dissipation Catherine, the only daughter and the youngest member of the family, usually made her home with James, but was sufficiently adaptable to join William's household for a time, though there is a tradition that she was not acceptable to Mrs Blake otherwise nothing is known of her except that she was distinguished in appearance and outlived her brothers. Robert, nearly five years younger than William, the only one of the family who was spiritually akin to him, died at twenty-five

Blake's father seems to have become a symbol for that authority against which the poet and mystic, with his twofold hostility to reason, instinctively rebelled, whether in literature, art, religion, or morality, at least we may guess as much from his poems and from the little we know of his early life Neither does any close sympathy with his mother seem to have survived the tenderness of early childhood recalled in the Songs of Innocence But we need not insult her memory, as one biographer has done, by assigning to her as funeral oration the obviously symbolic poem, "To Tirzah" Blake, according to his disciple Tatham, was wont in old age to speak in a kindly way of both father and mother Clearly they had done their best to bridge the gulf not only of age but of temperament between themselves and their son. But the boy's visionary faculty was perplexing to his truth-loving parents When he was only four years old God "put his head to the window" and set him a-screaming: angels walked among the hay-makers one summer morning, and Mrs Blake saved him from his father's wrath when, at the age of eight or so, he spoke of seeing a tree on Peckham Rye starred with angels, though she was less lenient to a later vision of Ezekiel His father recognized that so strange and stormy a child must be spared the discipline of school. He learnt to read and write, probably with his mother's help, and showed such a passion for drawing that at the age of ten he was sent to Par's drawing school in the Strand. James Blake the elder encouraged this taste by giving him casts of the Gladiator, the Hercules, and the Venus de Medici, and pocket money to spend on his studies. His imagination was inflamed by prints after Raphael, Michael Angelo, Albert Durer, and others; he sought originals, genuine or spurious, in the sale-rooms and in private collections, and the auctioneer, Langford, favoured his small bids, calling the child, even then dogmatic in his predilections, his "little connoisseur." There was a talk of sending him to the studio of some well-known painter, but he thought the high premium an injustice to the rest of the family, and asked to be apprenticed to an engraver instead. Ryland, afterwards hanged for forgery, was chosen by his father, but the boy had an intuition of Ryland's fate, not repeated later in the case of his admirer Wainewright, the journalist and murderer. James Blake may be credited with a certain imaginativeness since he was attracted by the doctrines of Emmanuel Swedenborg, and the fact that on this occasion he listened to William shows that he could be a sympathetic and reasonable parent. Basire was substituted for Ryland, receiving a premium of fifty pounds. While Blake was with Basire Goldsmith called one day, and the boy envied his finely shaped head. A later remark shows that Blake singled out Goldsmith from among his associates for admiration. "Such Men as Goldsmith ought not to have been Acquainted with such Men as Reynolds." At Basire's he also came across Woollet and Strange, the engravers, whose work he afterwards criticized with vehemence in the Public Address. Basire was in touch with Celtic antiquaries, and M. Saurat has explained many obscure passages in Blake's writings by his early knowledge of their theories. It was a current belief among them that Britain was the birthplace of the human race and of the patriarchal religion, the Druids being the originators of derivative religions and civilizations throughout the world.

Blake worked at his craft under Basire for two years.

Then

Then new apprentices joined the establishment. The fortunate result of friction—"he was too simple and they too cunning"—was that Basire sent him to make drawings in Westminster Abbey for engravings required by the Society of Antiquaries. "There"—as Blake himself told Malkin—"he found a treasure which he knew how to value. He saw the simple and plain road to the style of art at which he aimed, unentangled in the intricate mazes of modern practice. The monuments of kings and queens in Westminster Abbey, which surround the Chapel of Edward the Confessor, particularly that of Henry the Third, the beautiful monument and figure of Queen Eleanor, Queen Philippa, and Edward the Third, King Richard the Second, and his Queen were among his first studies. All these he drew in every point he could, frequently standing on the monument and viewing the figures from the top. The heads he considered as portraits, and all the ornaments appeared as miracles of art to his Gothicized imagination." And he saw them for himself as they had been, clothed in the glory of colour. This close study of Gothic—always for him the "living form"—left indelible traces on his style. "Everything connected with Gothic art and churches, and their builders, was a passion with him." He saw Christ and his Apostles among the tombs, and he both saw a great procession of monks and priests, choristers and censer-bearers, and heard their chant. Less congenial visitants were the Westminster School boys, then allowed to romp at will in the Abbey. They naturally teased the queer, industrious apprentice with the snub nose and flames of golden hair. One climbed a pinnacle on a level with his scaffold. Blake, in a rage, threw him violently to the ground and complained to the Dean, who withdrew the schoolboys' privilege. The last five years of his apprenticeship were spent thus in the Abbey and other churches.

Basire was commissioned by Sir Joseph Ayloffe in 1775 to copy some old paintings, which had just been uncovered in the Presbytery, for Vetusta Monumenta. These copies, still preserved in the Library of the Society of Antiquaries, were considered to Professor Lethaby to be largely the work of Blake.¹ Gough's Sepulchral Monuments

in Great Britain contains six portraits from the Monuments of Kings and Queens which were both drawn and engraved by Blake that from the head of Queen Philippa was praised by Stothard as "a remarkably correct and fine drawing" The engravings of the monuments which precede the portraits were probably also from drawings by Blake Malkin speaks of a drawing of the monument of Aylmer de Valence, and of innumerable other drawings by Blake both in the Abbey and in other churches It is therefore likely that other engravings in Gough's book were from drawings by him, and possible that some of the prints signed by Basire in other architectural works published at this time were actually executed by Blake His earliest original engraving is "Joseph of Arimathea among the Rocks of Albion" Below the engraving is "Michael Angelo Pinxit Engraved by W Blake 1773 from an old Italian Drawing" The drawing has not been identified, but the figure is derived from one in Michael Angelo's Crucifixion of St Peter in the Vatican, and the landscape is probably Blake's own The description of the engraving is as interesting as the work itself, remarkable enough for a boy of sixteen

This is One of the Gothic Artists who Built the Cathedrals in what we call the Dark Ages, Wandering about in sheep skins & goat skins, of whom the World was not Worthy, such were the Christians in all Ages

A drawing of "Moses and the Tablets of Stone," in black and white with touches of colour, is also extant It is signed "W B 1774", and resembles the engraving of Joseph of Arimathea

But the home atmosphere was tolerant rather than sympathetic Many years later Blake wrote to Cumberland "We remember when a Printshop was a rare bird in London & I myself remember when I thought my pursuits of Art a kind of criminal dissipation & neglect of the main chance, which I hid my face for not being able to abandon as a Passion which is forbidden by Law & Religion, but now it appears to be Law & Gospel too"

The prose he read at this time did not serve to diminish this sense of isolation

I read Burke's Treatise when very Young, at the same time I read Locke on Human Understanding & Bacon's Advancement of Learning, on Every one of these Books I wrote my Opinions, & on looking them over find that my Notes on Reynolds in this Book are exactly Similar I felt the Same Contempt & Abhorrence then that I do now They mock Inspiration & Vision Inspiration & Vision was then, & now is, & I hope will always Remain, my Element, my Eternal Dwelling place, how can I then hear it Contemned without returning Scorn for Scorn?

A more congenial book, Fuseli's translation of Winckelmann's Reflections on the Painting and Sculpture of the Greeks, is known to have been in his possession during his apprenticeship

But, happily, in the region of poetry Blake wandered further afield, finding pastime and good company. Drawing in the Abbey he had, in Malkin's phrase, "himself almost become a Gothic monument" At home he was seeking another living form, a form for verse. A small volume, printed, but thrown aside, in 1783, shows where he searched, and how he used what he had found. The Poetical Sketches, said to have been written between his twelfth and twentieth years, fall into two groups, the first for the most part imitative of works written or published in his own day, the second largely inspired by those treasures he had delved into the past to find. The first are the restless cries of a bird disturbed in the darkness, the second his songs at dawn. In the first another voice joins an ineffectual choir vaguely striving for they know not what, in the second a new voice sings, though it be sometimes to an old tune.

In the first group the rhythmical prose pieces exhibit the disastrous influence of Ossian. The Scandinavian cult appears in "Gwin, King of Norway" "Blind Man's Buff" follows an eighteenth-century fashion. In "Fair Elenor," a Strawberry of Otranto, only a few lines reveal his explorations among the Elizabethans

My lord was like a flower upon the brows
Of lusty May! Ah life, as frail as flower!

* * * *

My lord was like the opening eyes of day
When western winds creep softly o'er the flowers

But

But he is darken'd, like the summer's noon,
Clouded, fall'n like the stately tree, cut down,
The breath of heaven dwelt among his leaves

"King Edward the Third"—an interesting exercise—shows familiarity with Shakespeare's historic plays, but no dramatic power

Yet even in their weakness the poems of this group are remarkable as the work of a boy when the foundations of the Augustan faith were not visibly shaken, a boy whose reading depended on his own initiative. It is clear that he had gone for his vocabulary not only to Spenser, Milton, and Shakespeare's plays, but to Shakespeare's poems, then little known, to Jonson, Fletcher, and the Carolines. Of his own time he had read, it may be guessed, Gray, Collins, and Thomson, certainly Percy's Reliques, and demonstrably Ossian. Later he became an admirer of Chatterton, whose poems were not published till 1778, but whether some likeness of form shows only kinship of genius or indicates additions made to the Sketches after 1777—his twentieth year—remains uncertain.

The poems of the second group mark a moment of departure in English literature. The change which they announce is in essence a return from the ideal of Excellence to that of Ecstasy as the aim and justification of poetic enterprise. To the Augustans, as to the French classical poets, and to their Latin models before them, the poetic objective was the level and lucid statement, in a style sustained at the due height of dignity, clarity and beauty, and warmed, coloured, and decorated with the appropriate graces of diction and rhythm. The new age, with the Elizabethans, the Greek lyrists, and the folk-singers of all lands on its side, was to aim at more intense and instantaneous effects, at the capture in their last subtlety of those moments of heightened capacity wherein it believed the secret of poetic experience to lie. And as the aim was different so the approach was different. The large and regular movement of epic, drama, and ode was left for swifter, more impulsive forms. The set phrasing of the classicists and their established metres were broken up. The poets went in quest of new words, new combinations, new rhythms, in short, of a new medium capable of rendering rendering the gradations and refinements of the richer and more elusive moods which had now to be set down in verse

This was the revolution which poetry was to achieve in the last years of the eighteenth century and the beginning of the nineteenth, and which Blake carried through in his own work, unknowing and unknown. He was not borne on the tide of new ideas which came setting in a few years later: painter and musician as he was, neither landscape nor folk-songs furnished him with inspiration, he had no time for waterfalls or ruins, and London could provide little or none of that popular poetry out of which the art of Burns arose. The poetry of Blake is self-begotten: it lived to itself without influence on the world, it might have perished without record. And yet it promises—and often realizes—whatever is new and significant in the poetry which was to declare itself twenty years later, and to reign unchallenged from that time onward.

At the head of this second group stands "To the Muses." Next to it comes the lyric of which Malkin makes the amazing statement that "It was written before the age of fourteen, in the heat of youthful fancy, unchastised by judgment."

How sweet I roam'd from field to field
And tasted all the summer's pride,
Till I the prince of love beheld,
Who in the sunny beams did glide!

He show'd me lilies for my hair,
And blushing roses for my brow,
He lead me through his gardens fair,
Where all his golden pleasures grow

With sweet May dews my wings were wet,
And Phoebus fir'd my vocal rage,
He caught me in his silken net,
And shut me in his golden cage

He loves to sit and hear me sing,
Then, laughing, sports and plays with me,
Then stretches out my golden wing,
And mocks my loss of liberty

Here, in spite of Phoebus and the vocal rage, the boy has wandered wandered off the gravel walk and is gazing up into one of Marvell's trees

My soul into the boughs does glide,
There, like a bird, it sits and sings,
Then whets and combs its silver wings
And till prepared for longer flight
Waves in its plumes the various light

It is characteristic of Blake that whether from indifference, impatience, or lack of scholarship, he could make nothing of the prevalent Augustan metres his couplets and his blank verse are equally bad, and his six attempts at a Spenserian stanza have been fairly dismissed with the criticism "all different and all wrong." The sonnet he appears never to have attempted, although his contemporaries were turning them out by the hundred. May it not be that the fourteenth Proverb of Hell—"Bring out number, weight & measure in a year of dearth"—usually read as a jibe at the heroic couplet—is really a criticism of that dubious tribute to Milton, the fashionable sonnet, before Wordsworth gave new substance to the form? But in lyric metres he is revolutionary and a master. It was a principle of eighteenth-century lyric poetry that with rare variations each poem should be confined to one type of foot, generally iambic, occasionally, and for special purposes, anapaestic. Blake goes back to the freer handling of the Carolines, the quickening of iambic form by means of anapaests—and conversely the steadying of an anapaestic line by means of iambs and spondees—remained his metrical signature.

And there the lion's ruddy eyes
Shall flow with tears of gold,
And pitying the tender cries,
And walking round the fold,
Saying "Wrath, by his meekness,
"And by his health, sickness
"Is driven away
"From our immortal day."

Ah, Sunflower! weary of time,
Who countest the steps of the Sun . . .

The days of my youth rise fresh in my mind,
My face turns green and pale

In

In the "Mad Song" the new prosody is heard in its most daring form the last traces of the eighteenth century have disappeared in freedom of phrasing and diction it is wholly Blake and wholly of the new age

The wild winds weep,
And the night is a-cold,
Come hither, Sleep,
And my griefs unfold
But lo! the morning peeps
Over the eastern steeps,
And the rustling birds of dawn
The Earth do scorn

Lo! to the vault
Of paved heaven,
With sorrow fraught
My notes are driven
They strike the ear of night,
Make weep the eyes of day
They make mad the roaring winds,
And with tempests play

Like a fiend in a cloud,
With howling woe,
After night I do croud,
And with night will go,
I turn my back to the east
From whence comforts have increas'd,
For light doth seize my brain
With frantic pain

Like his metre, his diction anticipates the freedom discovered a generation later by Coleridge, and made over by him to the use of all future poets. Analyse the phrasing of the Poetical Sketches reveals an eighteenth-century stratum of "yawning deeps," "modest s," "charming nests," and "pleasing woes," but it also discloses that liberty of combination which is the note of the developed romantic style, where any epithet may be linked with any noun provided it gives the right picture "holy feet," "rustling birds," "feather'd clouds," "flourishing hair," are so many essays in direct vision, once completely caught and rendered in those lines which Collins might have dreamt and forgotten on waking

Let thy west wind sleep on
In silence with thy glimmering eyes,
In spite of Phoebus with silver

Even

Even the secret of the Parnassians is not unknown to this London apprentice—the use of antique imagery for romantic ends

We lack not songs, nor instruments of joy,
Nor echoes sweet, nor waters clear as heaven,
Nor laurel wreaths against the sultry heat

Blake, having completed his apprenticeship as an engraver under Basire, became, at the age of twenty-one, a student at the Royal Academy, of which the Swiss decorative artist, George Michael Moser, was Keeper. There he drew both from the antique and from the living model. But, according to Malkin, "he professes drawing from life always to have been hateful to him; and speaks of it as looking more like death, or smelling of mortality." This impatience with the model, which brought him back from visions of beauty to a set pose and a set task, may be held accountable for some of Blake's shortcomings as an artist. It would seem likely that in later life he worked little from models, save for studies from himself and Mrs. Blake. This was probably due partly to distaste, and partly to economy. As a pupil he was rebellious in another matter also, he insisted on being left to form his own opinions. One of his notes on Reynolds's Discourses shows him, as usual, defying the powers that be.

"I was once looking over the Prints from Rafael & Michael Angelo in the Library of the Royal Academy. Moser came to me & said 'You should not Study these old Hard, Stiff & Dry, Unfinish'd Works of Art—Stay a little & I will shew you what you should Study.' He then went & took down Le Brun's and Rubens's Galleries. How I did secretly Rage! I also spoke my Mind. [A line cut away by the binder] I said to Moser, 'These things that you call Finish'd are not Even Begun, how can they then be Finish'd?' The Man who does not know The Beginning never can know the End of Art."

His first interview with Reynolds may belong also to this period. Gilchrist quotes a letter from an unnamed friend of Blake: "Once I remember his talking to me of Reynolds, he became furious at what the latter had dared to say of his early works. When a very young man he had called on Reynolds to show him some designs, and had been recommended to work with less extravagance and more more simplicity, and to correct his drawing This Blake seemed to regard as an affront never to be forgotten He was very indignant when he spoke of it "

Rebels are not apt to repress the defects of their qualities, and Blake's lifelong antipathy to Reynolds may be partly accounted for by anger at this just criticism, although he used to describe a later and more friendly conversation "Well, Mr Blake, I hear you despise our art of oil-painting" "No, Sir Joshua, I don't despise it, but I like fresco better "

Meanwhile Blake was not only drawing out of school for his own delight, but was earning his living as an engraver He was well supplied with commissions both for book illustrations and for engravings from pictures His principal employers were the booksellers Johnson and Harrison, and most of the illustrations were engraved from drawings by Stothard for novels and magazines Malkin mentions two historical engravings from Blake's own designs, but these have not been identified A drawing of "Edward and Elenor," presumably for the engraving mentioned in Blake's Prospectus of 1793, is assigned to circa 1779, which is also the approximate date of the drawing of "The Penance of Jane Shore" exhibited thirty years later The latter shows the influence of Mortimer, the historical painter, whom Blake admired, and "The Ordeal of Queen Emma," painted about the same time, resembles it in treatment "Glad Day," engraved in 1780, gives the first promise of what was to come It was perhaps inspired by the lines in Romeo and Juliet .

Night's candles are burnt out, and jocund day Stands tip-toe on the misty mountain tops

The likeness to Mrs Blake's early drawing of her husband suggests that "Day" is in some sort a portrait of the young Blake The design must have been a favourite with Blake himself, as some years later he enlarged and coloured it Below some of the earlier impressions are engraved the lines.

Albion arose from where he labour'd at the Mill with Slaves Giving himself for the Nations he danc'd the dance of Eternal Death .

thus identifying Day with Blake's symbolic conception of Albion

Albion, the Eternal Man The only original book illustration of this period is the charming frontispiece of An Elegy, Set to Music by Thos Communs, Organist of Penzance, Cornwall (1786)

Engraving brought him into contact with other artists, Stothard and Flaxman, Fuseli and Barry Stothard was two years older than Blake, and already acquiring reputation as a graceful illustrator Some time between 1780 and 1782 they sailed up the Medway sketching with Stothard's friend Ogleby A drawing of Stothard's survives, depicting an absurd interruption to their tour when they were arrested as spies of the French Government, and detained in a tent composed of their own sails until they could obtain certificates of their good faith from some members of the Royal Academy This friendship was unfortunately shattered some years afterwards by Cromek's Canterbury Pilgrims' plot

Blake was introduced by Stothard to Flaxman, who was a Swedenborgian He became an enthusiastic admirer of Blake's genius both as poet and painter, and gave him considerable professional assistance Blake returned the affection of Flaxman, his "dear Sculptor of Eternity," although at a later time the friendship was clouded by suspicions Both Flaxman and Stothard were pilloried in some of those bitter epigrams, offspring of a mood and not intended for publication

I found them blind I taught them how to see
And now they know neither themselves nor me
'Tis Excellent to turn a thorn to a pin,
A Fool to a bolt, a Knave to a glass of gin

Henry Fuseli, the son of a Swiss painter, had received marked encouragement from Sir Joshua when he first came to England in 1764, as a youth, with a portfolio full of drawings He returned in 1780 after a stay of some years in Italy, and lodged in Broad Street With him Blake formed an enduring though chequered friendship, commemorated in the grotesquely affectionate epigram

The only Man that e'er I knew
Who did not make me almost spew
Was Fuseli he was both Turk & Jew——
And so, dear Christian Friends, how do you do?

Tatham

Tatham also says that "Blake was more fond of Fuseli than any other man on earth" Fuseli, although so much Blake's senior, found him "damned good to steal from" Reader, writer, and wit, as well as an artist of considerable power, he had no doubt in his turn a stimulating effect on the younger man Which of the two first declared that nature put him out? Their literary tastes were congenial Fuseli was a worshipper of Shakespeare and Milton he it was who applied to Pope's "Eloisa to Abeldar" the phrase "hot ice"

The Irishman, Barry, was also an older man than Blake. Disappointed in a scheme for decorating St Paul's, in which Sir Joshua and other artists were also concerned, he went with sixteen shillings in his pocket to offer his services free to the Royal Society of Arts The result, his vast pictures on "Human Improvement," completed in 1783, may be seen any day in the large room at the Adelphi—a parlous example of the grand style which won Dr Johnson's approval Barry may have inspired Blake to see what he had meant to do and what he declared in his descriptive pamphlet that he had sublimely accomplished, rather than the muddled and somewhat ridiculous performance he actually achieved At any rate, Blake became a strong adherent of Barry's

Who will Dare to Say that Polite Art is Encouraged or Either Wished or Tolerated in a Nation where The Society for the Encouragement of Art Suffer'd Barry to Give them his Labour for Nothing, A Society Composed of the Flower of the English Nobility & Gentry?—Suffering an Artist to Starve while he Supported Really what They, under Pretence of Encouraging, were Endeavouring to Depress — Barry told me that while he Did that Work, he Lived on Bread & Apples

Blake's poem on Barry has disappeared, and nothing is known of its contents except that the verses beginning "I asked my dear friend Orator Prig" were marked by Blake "to come in Barry a Poem." And the lines "To Venetian Artists," also in the Rossetti MS, may have been intended as a continuation of these Barry quarrelled with most people, including his patron Edmund Burke, but his enthusiasm and sincerity would have endeared him to Blake, and he was also a seer of visions

Even as it was [says his biographer] people soon forgot his rough language and his oaths in the strength of his mind we have witnessed many instances of this, and once saw a devout old lady entering the room where he was, hold him for some time in a sort of horror. The conversation, however, happened to turn on the nature of Christian meekness, which gave him the opportunity of opening on the character of our Saviour—with that power of heart and mind, and energy of words, that in spite of the oaths which fell abundantly, the old lady remarked that she never heard so divine a man in her life, and desired to know who he was

At the Royal Academy in 1780 Blake exhibited "The Death of Earl Goodwin," a water-colour drawing, and two drawings, "War Unchained by an Angel—Fire, Pestilence and Famine following" and a "Breach in a City—The Morning after a Battle," in 1784. These or other works of his attracted the attention of Romney, who declared that his historical drawings ranked with those of Michael Angelo. Blake also admired Romney, and the two artists probably had some influence upon each other's style. John Hawkins, a Cornishman, who had ordered several drawings from Blake, tried at this time to raise a subscription that he might be sent to study in Rome. It may be left to those with more right to dogmatize on the probable effect on his genius, to deplore, or to be grateful for, the failure of this scheme.

Besides his development as an artist his life was an eventful one. The Lord George Gordon No-Popery Riots took place in June 1780, and Blake, chancing to meet the rioters, was swept down to Newgate in the front rank. There he saw the prison burnt, and the prisoners released. If his hatred of prisons, "built with stones of Law," dates back from his youth, so, too, does his hatred of jealousy. Courting a "lively little girl" called Polly Wood he found that she was encouraging another admirer. Blake expostulated "Are you a fool?" she scornfully asked "That cured me of jealousy," said Blake, but his vehemence against the vice suggests that it was not entirely uprooted, but required the periodic application of a weed-killer. Polly's behaviour had upset him and he went for a change of scene to stay at the home of a Battersea market-gardener named Boucher, to whose daughter, Catherine, he told his woes. "Do you pity me?" he suddenly asked "Yes, indeed

I do " "Then I love you " Catherine was ready her pity was the child of love Mrs Blake was wont to relate that when her mother spoke of marriage she used to answer that she had not yet seen the man, but when she first saw William Blake the conviction that this was he so overwhelmed her that she nearly fainted Cunningham records a tradition that Blake's marriage was not acceptable to his father, it was, perhaps, for this reason that he did not see Catherine again until he was making enough money to support her A year later, 18th August 1782, they were married at Battersea Church, and went to lodge at 23 Green Street, Leicester Fields Catherine Sophia Blake, who was four years younger than her husband, had, to judge from vague descriptions and more reliable drawings, a face full of beauty and character, with large dark eyes A woman who "is like a flame of many colours of precious jewels" when she thinks of exchanging London for the country, cannot have lacked expression If we assume that she is portrayed in the drawing of a young woman sitting on the edge of a bed in which a man resembling Blake is lying, she must have had also a graceful and well-proportioned figure She was a competent and frugal housewife, avoiding fuss by the silent reminder of the empty plates when it was time for her husband to return from the other world to the provision of daily bread, though she held a secret precautionary guinea in reserve

The Blakes had no children, speculation as to the influence of this deprivation may be left to those who deem it worth their pains In spite of, or because of it, the only indication of friction in their married life which does not rest on vague tradition or assumptions of autobiographical intention in the poems, is the account of a dispute between Mrs Blake and Robert when he formed part of their household "Kneel down and beg Robert's pardon, directly," said William, "or you never see my face again!" She knelt and murmured, "Robert, I beg your pardon, I am in the wrong" The incident was closed by Robert's magnanimous "Young woman, you lie! I am in the wrong." Is there a reminiscence of this in Jerusalem?

She who adores not your frowns will only loathe your smiles

What

What such partial and desultory reading cannot afford may be supplied by the conversation of learned and ingenious men, which is the best of all substitutes for those who have not the means or opportunities of deep study. There are many such men in this age, and they will be pleased with communicating their ideas to artists, when they see them curious and docile, if they are treated with that respect and deference which is so justly their due. Into such society, young artists, if they make it the point of their ambition, will by degrees be admitted. There, without formal teaching, they will insensibly come to feel and reason like those they live with, and find a rational and systematic taste imperceptibly formed in their minds, which they will know how to reduce to a standard, by applying general truth to their own purposes, better perhaps than those to whom they owed the original sentiment.

Such was the advice of Sir Joshua Reynolds and such the behaviour of the modest young Flaxman. The Rev Henry Mathew, incumbent of Percy Chapel, Charlotte Street, and afternoon preacher at St Martin's-in-the-Fields, had found the sickly child sitting behind the counter of his father's shop, trying to teach himself Latin. He lent him books, and later Mrs Mathew, a charming and well educated woman, read Homer aloud while Flaxman drew subjects so suggested. Their drawing-room, with its putty-and-sand statuettes by Flaxman, painted glass window, and furniture in keeping with these adornments, was a stronghold of culture, where struggling artists were welcomed and patronized. Their circle included such eminent persons as Mrs Montagu, student of Shakespeare, and patroness of chimney-sweeps, Mrs Elizabeth Carter, linguist, poetess, and pudding maker, Mrs Chapone, impulsive and entertaining despite her improving books, Mrs Brooke, the novelist, Mrs Barbauld, and Mrs Hannah More. They represented what was best in the cultured middle class which had grown up during the eighteenth century, intelligent, industrious, philanthropic, superbly didactic, pleased with themselves and their productions, but not wholly impervious to other influences. Mrs Montagu, for example, greatly as she admired Mr Pope, felt that he lacked "that something which makes a poet divine, that lifts him 'above the visible diurnal sphere', that gives him visions of worlds unknown, makes him sing like a seraphim, tune his harp to the musick of the spheres, and raise enchantments around him him " Mrs Chapone was emphatic in her dissatisfaction with modern writers "It is only from the ignorant that we can now have any thing original, every master copies from those that are of established authority, and does not look at the natural object "

To this company, then, Flaxman hopefully introduced his fellow-struggler Blake with the Poetical Sketches in his pocket, Blake who said of himself, "I never made friends but by spiritual gifts, by severe contentions of friendship & the burning fire of thought " "Opposition is true Friendship "

At first all went well Blake read some of his poems, or sang them to his own tunes, which were so beautiful that professional musicians noted them down The manuscript was produced, and Mrs Mathew persuaded her husband to share the expense of printing the Poetical Sketches with the generous Flaxman The copies were given to Blake, but the book was neither published nor offered for sale Mr Mathew contributed the Preface

The following sketches were the production of an untutored youth, commenced in his twelfth, and occasionally resumed by the author till his twentieth year, since which time, his talents having been wholly directed to the attainment of excellence in his profession, he has been deprived of the leisure requisite to such a revisal of these sheets, as might have rendered them less unfit to meet the public eye

Conscious of the irregularities and defects to be found in almost every page, his friends have still believed that they possessed a poetic originality, which merited some respite from oblivion These, their opinions, remain, however, to be now reprov'd or confirmed by a less partial public

Broad-minded, kind-hearted orthodoxy, desirous to help and instruct, is often more exasperating to the young and rebellious than frank hostility Bearing Mr. Mathew's preface in mind, it is not surprising to learn from J T Smith, who also frequented the salon, that "it happened, unfortunately, soon after this period, that in consequence of his unbending deportment, or what his adherents are pleased to call his manly firmness of opinion, which certainly was not at all times considered pleasing by every one, his visits were not so frequent." A remark of Blake's own may be applied to summarize the situation from his point of view "The Enquiry in England is not whether a man has Talents & Genius, But whether he is Passive & Polite & a Virtuous Ass & obedient to Noblemen's Opinions in Art & Science If he is, he is a Good Man If Not, he must be Starved "

An Island in the Moon, the manuscript of which is now in the Fitzwilliam Museum, was written after Blake's rupture with the Mathew set, probably about 1787 It is, epigrams apart, his one attempt at satire, and can never have been intended for publication Coarse with the combined coarseness of youth and of the age to which he belonged, it is, despite the compressed nostrils of some of his critics, quite innocuous, entertaining enough to those of adaptable humour, interesting as autobiography, though unfinished and immature as literature The victims pilloried as each intent on their own particular form of learned nonsense, and the pretentious and frivolous women, have not been identified with members of the Mathew circle, but the pages ring with Blake's irritation at contemporary culture Mr Foster Damon conjectures that "Sipsop the Pythagorean" is a skit on Thomas Taylor, the Platonist, who gave twelve lectures on the "Platonic Philosophy" to a distinguished audience at Flaxman's house, and "Inflammable Gass the Wind-Finder" on Dr Priestley, scientist and revolutionist Mrs Gimblet suggests descriptions of Mrs Charlotte Lennox, author of The Female Quixote, who may well have been a friend of Mrs Mathew Dr Johnson did not, so far as we know, honour Mrs Mathew's gatherings with his presence, but his opinions were doubtless quoted ad nauseam Hence perhaps the ribald song beginning

Lo the Bat with Leathern wing,
Winking & blinking,
Winking & blinking,
Winking & blinking,
Like Dr Johnson

Toward the end of the manuscript a page or more is unfortunately missing, containing a discussion between the Cynic, Quid, who appears to be Blake himself, and his wife, on a new method of printing, foreshadowing the Songs of Innocence They are just quitting this subject for a plot pour épater les bourgeois at the house of one Mr Femality, and and it should be noted that Blake's treatment of himself is fully as crude and cruel as that of his patrons and critics

One or two extracts from this boyish performance, selected with due consideration for the reader's delicacy, will sufficiently indicate its quality

The three Philosophers sat together thinking of nothing In comes Etruscan Column the Antiquarian, & after an abundance of Enquiries to no purpose, sat himself down & described something that nobody listen'd to So they were employ'd when Mrs Gimblet came in The corners of her mouth seem'd—I don't know how, but very odd, as if she hoped you had not an ill opinion of her—to be sure, we are all poor creatures! Well, she seated (herself) & seem'd to listen with great attention while the Antiquarian seem'd to be talking of virtuous cats But it was not so, she was thinking of the shape of her eyes & mouth, & he was thinking of his eternal fame

Then Suction asked if Pindar was not a better Poet than Ghiotto was a Painter

"Plutarch has not the life of Ghiotto," said Sipsop

"No," said Quid, "to be sure, he was an Italian "

"Well," said Suction, "that is not any proof "

"Plutarch was a nasty ignorant Puppy," said Quid Then said Quid, "I think that Homer is bombast, & Shakespeare is too wild, and Milton has no feelings, they might be easily outdone Chatterton never writ those poems! A parcel of fools, going to Bristol! If I was to go, I'd find it out in a minute, but I've found it out already "

Blake, as satirist, has been compared with Peacock There is also some affinity with Alice in Wonderland, as, for instance, in the following scrap of conversation

Obtuse Angle, Scopprell, Aradobo, & Tilly Tally are all met in Obtuse Angle's study

"Pray," said Aradobo, "is Chatterton a Mathematician?"

"No," said Obtuse Angle "How can you be so foolish as to think he was?"

"Oh, I did not think he was—I only ask'd," said Aradobo

"How could you think he was not, & ask if he was?" said Obtuse Angle

"Oh no, Sir I did think he was, before you told me, but afterwards I thought he was not "

Obtuse Angle said "In the first place you thought he was, & then afterwards when I said he was not, you thought he was not. Why, I know that——"

"Oh no, Sir, I thought that he was not, but I ask'd to know whether he was "

"How can that be?" said Obtuse Angle "How could you ask & think that he was not?"

"Why," said he, "it came into my head that he was not "

"Why

"Why then," said Obtuse Angle, "you said that he was "

"Did I say so? Law! I did not think I said that "

"Did not he?" said Obtuse Angle

"Yes," said Scopprell

"But I meant——" said Aradobo, "I—I—I can't think Law! Sir, I wish you'd tell me how it is "

Then Obtuse Angle put his chin in his hand & said "Whenever you think, you must always think for yourself "

"How Sir?" said Aradobo "Whenever I think, I must think myself? I think I do In the first place——" said he with a grin

"Poo! Poo!" said Obtuse Angle "Don't be a fool "

An Island in the Moon is a fresh and genuine essay in a genre to which Blake never returned From a satirical criticism of society he passed at once to a mystical criticism of the universe, and the three Songs of Innocence which flower on his island show that the whole ebullition was but a part of the process by which the poet was arriving at full possession of his powers, the artist devising a new form of beauty, the mystic preparing for the first stage of the Way

After the death of his father in 1784 Blake, with help from Mrs Mathew, started a print shop at 27 Broad Street, next door to the family business which was carried on by James Blake the younger Parker, who had been a fellow apprentice at Basire's, became Blake's partner The firm of Parker & Blake published various prints engraved by Blake, including a "Zephyrus and Flora" after Stothard, but there is little information about this unsuccessful venture Meanwhile Blake continued his work for other publishers, and in 1785 again exhibited four drawings at the Academy Three of these illustrate the story of Joseph "Joseph's Brethren bowing before him", "Joseph making himself known to them", "Joseph ordering Simeon to be bound " The fourth, "The Bard, from Gray," was in Blake's own exhibition of 1809, and forms one of the subjects of his Descriptive Catalogue

King Edward and his Queen Elenor are prostrated, with their horses, at the foot of a rock on which the Bard stands, prostrated by the terrors of his harp on the margin of the river Conway, whose waves bear up a corse of a slaughtered bard at the foot of the rock The armies of Edward are seen winding among the Mountains

"He wound with toilsome march his long array "

Mortimer and Gloucester lie spell bound behind their King
The execution of this picture is also in Water Colours, or Fresco

Robert, now a pupil, lived with William and Catherine. A drawing of Robert's, reminiscent of Blake both in style and subject, is in the Print Room at the British Museum, and Blake made an engraving after it. Robert, gifted and lovable, was, according to Tatham's account, consumptive, and early in 1787 he became seriously ill. Blake nursed him for a fortnight, without taking any rest till the end came, and then he slept for three days and nights. At the last he saw Robert's soul rise through the ceiling "clapping its hands for joy." But he had always the sense of Robert's presence. In 1800 he wrote to Hayley "Thirteen years ago I lost a brother, and with his spirit I converse daily and hourly in the spirit, and see him in my remembrance, in the regions of my imagination. I hear his advice, and even now write from his dictate."

J. T. Smith says in his Biographical Sketch of Blake that Robert revealed in a vision the secret of illuminated printing. The fragment from An Island in the Moon, referred to above, shows that the matter was occupying Blake's attention.

"—thus Illuminating the Manuscript"

"Ay," said she, "that would be excellent"

"Then," said he, "I would have all the writing Engraved instead of Printed, & at every other leaf a high finish'd print—all in three Volumes folio—and sell them a hundred pounds apiece. They would print off two thousand."

"Then," said she, "whoever will not have them will be ignorant fools & will not deserve to live."

Smith's account is that "Blake, after deeply perplexing himself as to the mode of accomplishing the publication of his illustrated songs, without their being subject to the expense of letterpress, his brother Robert stood before him in one of his visionary imaginations, and so decidedly directed him in the way in which he ought to proceed, that he immediately followed his advice, by writing his poetry, and drawing his marginal subjects of embellishments in outline upon the copper-plate with an impervious liquid, and then eating the plain parts or lights away with aqua-fortis considerably below them, so that the outlines were were left as a stereotype. The plates in this state were then printed in any tint that he wished, to enable him or Mrs Blake to colour the marginal figures up by hand in imitation of drawings. That Blake had many secret modes of working, both as a colourist and an engraver, I have no doubt. His method of eating away the plain copper and leaving his drawn lines of his subjects and his words stereotype, is, in my mind, perfectly original. Mrs Blake is in possession of the secret, and she ought to receive something considerable for its communication, as I am quite certain it may be used to the greatest advantage both to artists and literary characters in general."

Mr Keynes has pointed out that the first idea of employing this process for book printing may have been suggested to Blake by George Cumberland, who was at work on a similar process, as appears from a letter to his brother, early in 1784. In a later letter of 10th November 1784 he says, "I sent my mode of Printing to M——'s last Review & they have copied it into all the Papers, but not quite correct." This account is to be found in A New Review with Literary Curiosities and Literary Intelligence for the year 1784, by Henry Maty, A M, Under-librarian at the British Museum, and late Secretary to the Royal Society (volume vi, page 318).

The first extant letter from Blake to Cumberland is dated 6th December 1795, and implies some previous acquaintance. Cumberland had helped Thomas Taylor to obtain literary work after he had set fire to the Freemason's Tavern in his endeavour to invent a perpetual lamp, and this led to Taylor's lectures on the Platonic Philosophy at Flaxman's house. It is therefore probable that Cumberland had met Blake some years before 1795. In any case Blake could hardly have failed to see the account published in the New Review and thence copied into the newspapers. If, as seems likely, Blake derived from Cumberland the idea of printing his own books, he may still have been inspired by Robert's spirit with the notion of colouring them by hand, and with the converse of Cumberland's process, which he jestingly describes in The Marriage of Heaven & Hell "But first the notion that man has a body distinct from his soul is to be expunged, this I shall do by printing in the infernal method, by corrosives, which in Hell are salutary and medicinal, melting apparent surfaces away, and displaying the infinite which was hid ”

However this may be, it is clear that after Robert's death Blake found the door into the visionary world, through which as a child he had strayed from time to time, as it were by accident. The Songs of Innocence is his twofold expression, as poet and artist, of his happiness during this, the first stage of the mystic way

The first experiments in the new process were two tiny tractates There is no Natural Religion and All Religions are One, to be described in a later chapter, which are less elaborate and less technically successful than the Songs of Innocence. The beauty of these songs—printed in coloured letters, the little pictures and decorations which intermingle with the text painted with a delicate brilliance by Blake's own hand—is at once too obvious and too subtle to describe, the Macgeorge copy in the Print Room at the British Museum, or another of the best examples, must be seen in order that it may be realized

THE CONTRARY STATES

Without Contraries is no progression

Piping down the valleys wild,
Piping songs of pleasant glee,
On a cloud I saw a child,
And he laughing said to me

“Pipe a song about a Lamb!”
So I piped with merry chear, “Piper, pipe that song again”,
So I piped he wept to hear “Drop thy pipe, thy happy pipe, Sing thy songs of happy chear”,

So I sang the same again,
While he wept with joy to hear “Piper, sit thee down and write In a book, that all may read”

So he vanish’d from my sight,
And I pluck’d a hollow reed,

And I made a rural pen
And I stain’d the water clear,
And I wrote my happy songs
Every child may joy to hear

SUCH is the origin of the Songs of Innocence as told by Blake himself. Since the day of imitation and of experiment is past, the characteristics of ecstatic poetry are even more marked in these Songs than in the best of the Poetical Sketches. The poet who partakes of what has been called the “sacramental perception” of nature will try to render his experience in all its freshness and immediacy. Still more surely will the mystic’s aim be ecstasy rather than excellence, since he not only knows that the veil, so beautiful and so luminous, is only a veil, but has caught glimpses of the mysteries which it protects from profane eyes. Throughout the Songs of Innocence the world of nature and the world of humanity are seen through the eyes of imagination, and through the eyes of a child. The Songs are

are all such that "every child may joy to hear," their primary meaning such that every child can understand. They are free not only from puerility, but from that equally common and deplorable quality false naïveté "How wide the Gulf & Unpassable, between Simplicity & Insipidity" They are written by a man who was also a child, because his visionary powers enabled him to live for a time in the Age of Innocence. The children for whom he writes are in a sense ideal children, since no child is completely immune from the effects of his own experience, or completely protected from the shadow cast upon him by the experience of others. But this does not make the songs unreal because every child—even the little chimney sweeper—has some stake in the Golden Age, some unreasoning, and, it may seem, unreasonable gleams of happiness.

It has been suggested that Blake in composing the Songs of Innocence may have acted on the hint in Dr. Watts' preface to his Divine and Moral Songs for Children, which he describes as "a slight specimen, such as I could wish some happy and condescending genius would undertake for the use of children and perform much better." There is no doubt that Blake had read the works of Watts. The resemblance between the lines from the Horae Lyricae,

Nor is my soul refined enough
To bear the beaming of his love,
And feel his warmer smiles
When shall I rest this drooping head?
I love, I love the sun, and yet I want the shade and the imagery of The Little Black Boy is too close for coincidence.

"Moral songs" were not needed in the age of innocence, and there is little that is didactic in these Songs of Blake's, but, although the contrary state is not yet patent, and the contrast between Innocence and Experience has not yet been made, some of them link the two states and bear a secondary mystical meaning. "Night," for instance, is an anticipation of that later vision at Felpham described in a poetic letter to Butts, which is more intense in its ecstasy, and more difficult for the non-mystical reader to understand. It is, perhaps, not only the loveliest of the Songs of Innocence

Innocence, but the most perfect poem Blake ever wrote. Even in the night of this life the moon is shining with the sun's reflected light Nature is beautiful, and there is care and deliverance for those who sorrow or are in danger, but it is only when wrath and sickness have been wholly destroyed that the universal day can dawn

The sun descending in the west,
The evening star does shine,
The birds are silent in their nest,
And I must seek for mine
The moon, like a flower
In heaven's high bower,
With silent delight
Sits and smiles on the night

Farewell, green fields and happy groves,
Where flocks have took delight
Where lambs have nibbled, silent moves
The feet of angels bright,
Unseen they pour blessing,
And joy without ceasing,
On each bud and blossom,
And each sleeping bosom

They look in every thoughtless nest,
Where birds are cover'd warm,
They visit caves of every beast,
To keep them all from harm
If they see any weeping
That should have been sleeping,
They pour sleep on their head,
And sit down by their bed

When wolves and tygers howl for prey,
They pitying stand and weep,
Seeking to drive their thirst away,
And keep them from the sheep,
But if they rush dreadful,
The angels, most heedful,
Receive each mild spirit,
New worlds to inherit

And there the lion's ruddy eyes
Shall flow with tears of gold,
And pitying the tender cries,
And walking round the fold,
Saying "Wrath, by his meekness,
"And by his health, sickness
"Is driven away
"From our immortal day

"And

"And now beside thee, bleating lamb,
 "I can lie down and sleep,
 "Or think on Him who bore thy name,
 "Graze after thee and weep
 "For, wash'd in life's river,
 "My bright mane for ever
 "Shall shine like the gold,
 "As I guard o'er the fold "

There is, however, a tendency among students of Blake's symbolic books, especially among such as value the mystic above the poet, to impose too systematic and definite a meaning upon the lyrics in the light of their own interpretations of the details of his other works, and so to destroy the picture which Blake had seen in a flash of imagination. For instance, the little Black Boy, whose "soul is white," wants to say two things that release from the body, whether black or white, will come when the beams of God's love can be borne, and that then he himself will be able to show his love and win that of the other child now estranged from him by the race barrier. This is how he says them

And thus I say to little English boy,
 When I from black and he from white cloud free,
 And round the tent of God like lambs we joy,

I'll shade him from the heat, till he can bear
 To lean in joy upon our father's knee,
 And then I'll stand and stroke his silver hair,
 And be like him, and he will then love me

The picture is clear enough, but a critic detects an ambiguity in the grammar which enables him to suggest that the little black boy may wish to stroke God's hair, not that of the other child, which would fit in with Blake's dictum in There is No Natural Religion "God becomes as we are, that we may be as he is." But this destroys the picture, because while the little black boy is stroking God's hair the little white boy disappears. This critic also suggests that the last stanza shows that Blake did not believe in the equality of the races. Are we to infer that he thought the black or white superior? Either inference can be forced out of the details of the picture. Is the black boy able to protect the other till he is strong enough to bear bear the joy of God's love, because he himself learnt his lesson better while in the body, or is he continuing to wait on him in a slavish capacity? The picture as Blake saw it, and as we can see it, forbids both interpretations

Equally destructive of the picture is the suggestion that the fourteen-year-old Blake symbolized marriage by the golden cage in the Song "How sweet I roamed" This would mean the superfluous insertion of a second little bird, sulking in a corner of the cage or trilling unheeded songs from an importunate throat

But Blake could not dwell for long in the Golden Age of Innocence While yet a boy he had realized that convention ruled the world of art and letters, and that inspiration was little better than dead As man and mystic he gave another expression to the same conviction The first of his symbolic books is the "Muses" of the early Poetical Sketches writ large, but in a cryptic hieroglyph Tiriel is easier to read than most of these books because it is full of movement and incident, but the symbolism is difficult to follow in detail Blind Tiriel, a creed outworn but still tyrannous, has lost his wife, Myratana, Inspiration He tries to console himself with Har, Poetry, in his cage of conventional verse, and Heva, complacent, senile art, who are protected in their weakness by their Mother, Mnetha, goddess of reason Tiriel pretends to be the ruler of the North, the spiritual, whereas he is, in fact, only capable of ruling the West, the material He deceives Reason, but his imposition is detected by Poetry and Art, degenerate though they be Leaving them he encounters his mighty brother, Ijm, Superstition, who refuses to recognize his power and returns to his "secret forests" His sons, ways of thought generated by him, refuse to help him in withstanding Superstition he therefore slays them, and his daughters, the Senses, who no longer have any outlook beyond the material world, save the youngest Hela, the fifth sense, Touch She, still alive, though degraded, guides him back to the dwelling of Har and Heva, meeting on the way his "foolish brother," Zazel, representing older creeds which have been subjected by him, who now jeers at his age and blindness Tiriel at last admits that he is only the ruler of the material region,

but dies when he realizes his error in substituting the restriction of law for the freedom of imagination. The text gives no promise of redemption, but there is a significant hint in the last illustration, where the young vines of ecstasy are springing up round the dead body of Tiriel.

The metaphysic of Tiriel is developed in the later Book of Urizen, and the significance of the survival of Hela, the sense of touch, is explained in the Introduction to Europe. The poem was written about 1788, but was not printed till 1874, when W. M. Rossetti included it in his Aldine edition. Twelve drawings intended to illustrate it are described by him in his annotated catalogue.

The mood of the Songs of Innocence more nearly recurs in Thel, the second of the symbolic books, and the next lovely example of illuminated printing. It is a link between the contrary states of the Songs of Innocence and the Songs of Experience, and, but for the malevolent influence of Ossian, it might have been similar in form, a lyric seems entangled in its ambling septenaries. Nevertheless Thel is the most perfect poem among the symbolic books, it contains indeed none of those intense passages of magnificent rhetoric which glorify some of the later books, but it never drops into an obscurity lacking beauty for a guide. Blake had been exploring Greek thought, perhaps in the company of Thomas Taylor: he now adopted the doctrine of pre-existence, and began to make use of symbolism obviously Greek in origin. The virgin, Thel, fears her death into this life: "A land of sorrows & of tears where never smile was seen."

The Clod of Clay, as later in a Song of Experience, tells her how to build a Heaven in Hell's despair:

"O Beauty of the vales of Har! we live not for ourselves Thou seest me the meanest thing, and so I am indeed
My bosom of itself is cold, and of itself is dark;
But he, that loves the lowly, pours his oil upon my head,
And kisses me, and binds his nuptial bands around my breast,
And says 'Thou mother of my children, I have loved thee
And I have given thee a crown that none can take away'
But how this is, sweet maid, I know not, and I cannot know,
I ponder, and I cannot ponder, yet I live and love."

He invites her to enter the world of experience through the gate of Imagination. There she is terrified when she sees

sees "her own grave-plot," the body in which she will be buried, and hears of the dangers to which the five senses will expose her. She flies back into eternity, her time for experience had not yet come. There is a hint in the last illustration that Thel fears death into the body over-much. Children, symbolic of Innocence, are guiding the serpent of the senses gaily through the sea of time and space.

The Songs of Experience are the record of the second stage of the Mystic Way. Despite Blake's Ossianic excursions in Tiriel and The Book of Thel the lyric gift had not failed him. The Songs of Innocence were issued alone in 1789, but there is no authentic copy of the Songs of Experience as a separate publication. In 1794 Songs of Innocence and of Experience shewing the Two Contrary States of the Human Soul appeared as one volume.

The other Songs of Experience all bear the clear impress of the contrary state. The ears of man are deaf to the Holy Word of Imagination, and therefore he fears love, and is incapable of forgiveness. "To Tirzah," the only Song of Experience which is really obscure, although the full and subtler meanings of some of the others may not reveal themselves till they have been read again and again, bears evidence of having been written at a later date, and does not appear in the earlier issues of Songs of Innocence and of Experience. Its symbolism cannot be understood without reference to Blake's later books. Two other lyrics might fitly have been included among the Songs of Experience. "A Divine Image" is antithetic to "The Divine Image" of the Songs of Innocence, said to have been composed by Blake in the New Jerusalem Church. It was not, however, included by Blake himself among the Songs, nor was it printed till some years after his death. It may have been rejected by him in favour of that other antithesis "The Human Abstract," which gives the pseudo-religious version of the Divine Image. The tree of Mystery symbolizes such religions, and the caterpillar and fly their priests who defile the truth. "As the caterpillar chooses the fairest leaves to lay her eggs on, so the priest lays his curse on the fairest joys." "A Cradle Song," again, with its exquisite

Sleep, Sleep in thy sleep Little sorrows sit & weep

was

was obviously written as a contrast to "A Cradle Song" of the Songs of Innocence, but was never included in the Songs of Experience

Some of the Songs of Experience appear in rough draft, or as fair copies from earlier drafts, in the MS book known as the Rossetti MS. A note on the back of the fly-leaf, signed D G C R, gives the history of the MS book so far as it was known to Rossetti: "I purchased this original MS of Palmer, an attendant in the Antique Gallery at the British Museum, on the 30th April, '47. Palmer knew Blake personally, and it was from the artist's wife that he had the present MS which he sold for 10s. Among the sketches there are one or two profiles of Blake himself."

It has been sometimes assumed that the Palmer referred to is Samuel Palmer, the well-known artist, and one of the group known as "The Ancients," with whom Blake became acquainted toward the end of his life. But this is obviously an error, as Samuel Palmer was never on the staff of the British Museum, his brother, William Palmer, was appointed as attendant in the Antique Gallery in 1848, and it may therefore be concluded that it was he who sold the MS. Rossetti copied all that he considered of value in the book, both verse and prose. He apparently contemplated the separate publication of a part of the contents of the MS book as he wrote on 1st November 1860 to his friend, William Allingham:

A man (one Gilchrist, who lives next door to Carlyle, and is as near him in other respects as he can manage) wrote to me the other day, saying he was writing a life of Blake, and wanted to see my manuscript by that genius. Was there not some talk of your doing something in the way of publishing the contents? I know William thought of doing so, but fancy it might wait long for his efforts, and I have no time, but really think its contents ought to be edited, especially if a new Life gives a "shove to the concern" (as Spurgeon expressed himself in thanking a liberal subscriber to his Tabernacle). I have not yet engaged myself any way to said Gilchrist on the subject, though I have told him he can see it here if he will give me a day's notice.

Abandoning his first idea, Rossetti lent the MS. to Gilchrist in 1861, and after the death of Gilchrist he himself prepared a selection of both poems and prose for publication in the second volume of the Life, emending the text and sometimes adding titles of his own. In 1868

Swinburne

Swinburne had access to the MS and made further extracts for his Critical Essay, especially from "The Everlasting Gospel," of which he gave a long and enthusiastic exposition. He also copied, from a loose scrap of paper which has now disappeared, the fragment of verse, "A fairy leapt upon my knee." W. M. Rossetti made some further use of the MS book in the Aldine edition of 1874. In 1887 the book became the property of Mr W. A. White, and Messrs Ellis & Yeats were enabled to print a few poems which had not appeared before. The first thorough and accurate account of the MS was given by Dr Sampson in his edition of 1905, from scholarly transcripts made by Mr White, the owner. Mr Keynes revised the text for the Nonesuch Edition from a photographic reproduction, and corrected Dr Sampson's reading in a few particulars. Their careful researches have established the order and dates of the various sections.

The earliest section contains eighteen of the Songs of Experience, eight of which are evidently fair copies. They are distinguished from the lyrics, which were not included in the Songs of Innocence and of Experience or ever published by Blake himself, by a vertical line drawn through them. These earlier versions differ in various particulars from the etched Songs. The other lyrics include "Never pain to tell thy love" and "Silent, Silent Night." Here, too, is "I asked a thief to steal me a peach," that triumph of the devil-angel over the explanatory prig, of which, Swinburne wrote "a light of laughter shines and sounds through the words," that plaint of the rebel artist-poet, uncertain where revolt should begin or end, "Thou hast a lap full of seed," and the verses "To Nobodaddy," one of the first suggestions of Urizen, the false god of this world.

The little picture book For Children: The Gates of Paradise, designs for which are in the MS book, was engraved in 1793, but the plates were reissued about 1818, with verses written after the later symbolic books, as For the Sexes: The Gates of Paradise. On page 116 of the MS book is a list of twenty-two subjects for a history of England. The History of England is, like The Gates of Paradise, described in Blake's Prospectus of 10th October 1793 as "a small book of Engravings, Price 3s. It was therefore, presumably, also also a children's picture book, but no copy of it is known

Most mystics during the second or Purgative stage—the inevitable reaction after the first ecstasy—are overwhelmed with self-disgust and feel an imperative need for self-mortification that they may escape from the snares of the senses, and so fit themselves for union with the absolute, the great reality of which they have just become dimly aware. But Blake suffered a more general disillusionment: his first ecstatic vision could not be recovered by purification of himself alone. He had looked on the world through the eyes of a child; he must now see it through the eyes of a man who perceives all the evil and misery, and rebels against the errors which cause them. In the Introduction he appeals to man, the “lapsed soul,” no longer typified by the innocent child but by Earth itself, imprisoned by the starry floor which symbolizes the discrete, and therefore misleading, light of reason, and the watery shore of time and space, to listen to the Holy Word of Imagination, that the sun of day may break again on his darkness. Earth answers with a despairing cry on which the Songs that follow are a commentary. Some of them are direct antitheses to Songs of Innocence. It is so with “The Tyger,” and Blake does not answer the question, “Did he who made the Lamb make thee?” “The roaring of lions, the howling of wolves, the raging of the stormy sea, and the destructive sword, are portions of eternity, too great for the eye of man,” he says in the Proverbs of Hell, but there he knows at least that “the wrath of the lion is the wisdom of God,” and that “the tygers of wrath are wiser than the horses of instruction.” The Nurse will not let the children play any longer as she can see no light, she even denies the reality of their innocent joys. “Your spring & your day are wasted in play.” The sight of the children on Holy Thursday is painful because their poverty is itself a wrong which no belated charity can right. The infant is born into a dangerous world where no joy can befall him. The chimney-sweeper knows that those who allow him to toil in misery are callous and hypocritical. “A Little Boy Lost,” showing the cruel fate of Truth and Innocence in the World

World of Experience, has no happy ending like "The Little Boy Lost" and "The Little Boy Found" of the Songs of Innocence. There would have been a similar contrast between "A Little Girl Lost" and "The Little Girl" with its sequel "The Little Girl Found," if the two latter poems, originally included in the Songs of Innocence had not been transferred by Blake to the Songs of Experience. The distribution of the songs between Innocence and Experience varies somewhat in different copies, a sign of the close relation between the Contrary States of the Soul. "A Dream," for example, appears among the Songs of Experience in two of the later copies, and "The Voice of the Ancient Bard," which is the utterance of one who has found his way towards the light through the tangled roots of experience, was more fitly placed there. "The School-boy," originally also a Song of Innocence, was likewise moved, the plate contains its own contrast as, though the boy in the text complains of forced instruction at school, the boy in the picture is reading a book in the vine because he enjoys it.

Mr Wicksteed's analysis¹ will convince most readers that a personal no less than a philosophic conflict was working itself out in Blake's mind. The little boy verses relate to intellectual experiences, the little girl verses to experiences of love, but marriage itself has its "contrary state." A sense of disillusionment and bondage had followed the first unthinking happiness. Blake, too, during these years was moving away from the respectable patrons of his youth to a circle of freethinkers and revolutionaries, which included, as an attractive but illiterate young wife may have noticed, the striking figure of Mary Wollstonecraft. He sought beauty and freedom wherever they might be found, and although most careful readers of the lyrics will feel instinctively that his rebellion was in thought and not in act, his wife distressed him by her jealousy. But Blake had always guardian fairies, and after a time one of them shewed him that marriage might be a synthesis of joy and spiritual freedom.

"Come hither, my sparrows,
My little arrows,

If a tear or a smile
Will a man beguile,
If an amorous delay
Clouds a sunshiny day,
If the step of a foot
Smites the heart to its root,
'Tis the marriage ring Makes each fairy a king "

So a fairy sung
From the leaves I sprung
He leap'd from the spray
To flee away
But in my hat caught
He soon shall be taught
Let him laugh, let him cry,
He's my butterfly,
For I've pull'd out the sting
Of the marriage ring

CHAPTER III

REVOLUTIONARY AND MYSTIC

Energy is the only life, and is from the Body, and Reason is the bound or outward circumference of Energy

AFTER his brother Robert's death Blake gave up the print shop, which apparently was not a financial success, and moved to 28 Poland Street, where he lived for five years. Gilchrist ascribed the dissolution of the partnership to disagreements with Parker, but does not adduce any authority for his assertion. During this period Blake exchanged the prosperous culture of the Mathew circle for the company of politicians and social reformers, Friends of Liberty and members of the London Corresponding Society. He used to tell his Tory friends in jest that by the shape of his forehead he was a predestined republican "I can't help being one, any more than you can help being a Tory your forehead is larger above, mine, on the contrary, over the eyes." Neither did the eyes with their look of exaltation, the "little clenched nostril," the large sensitive mouth with tremulous lips, suggest a readiness to accept as ultimate and necessary the evil of this best of all possible worlds. The red cap was so natural a covering for the fiery aureole of hair that he alone of the Liberty Boys would wear it serenely in the London streets, till the Days of Terror changed the symbolism of its colour. Blake's employer, Johnson, publisher of Wordsworth's Descriptive Sketches, and famous for his encouragement of Cowper and for his generous payment of an uncovenanted thousand pounds for the Task, was also the friend of enthusiasts for American Independence, and of those who were hopefully watching the Revolution in France and planning a democratic but bloodless programme for England. He gave weekly dinners to his intimates above the shop in St. Paul's Churchyard, continuing them in the Marshal's house when he was imprisoned for selling seditious literature At Johnson's Blake may have met old Dr Price, the preacher who provoked Burke's Reflections on the French Revolution, the advocate of international peace and religious toleration, the inventor of the doctrine of human perfectibility, which was to become the basis of Godwin's philosophic system, and an inspiration to Shelley

Another client of Johnson's was Dr Price's friend and successor, Joseph Priestley, discoverer of oxygen and possibly the original of Blake's "Inflammable Gass the Wind-Finder" His house, library, and laboratory were wrecked during the Birmingham Riots in 1791, on the occasion of a dinner in honour of the Anniversary of the French Revolution, at which he was not even present He was offered, but declined, a seat in the National Convention, and emigrated to America in 1794 Jeremy Bentham said that he owed to Priestley his phrase "the greatest happiness of the greatest number," and Coleridge has celebrated him as patriot, and saint, and sage,

Whom that my fleshly eye hath never seen,
A childish pang of impotent regret Hath thrilled my heart Him from his native land Statesmen, bloodstain'd, and priests idolatrous,
By dark lies madd'ning the blind multitude,
Drove with vain hate, calm, pitying he retir'd,
And mus'd expectant on these promis'd years

To Johnson's came also Thomas Paine, whose writings had inspired the American struggle for liberty Paine was saved from the gallows by Blake's commonsense and foresight Already threatened with a Government prosecution for his Rights of Man, he was recapitulating one evening an inflammatory speech of the night before, Blake told him that he was a dead man if he went home, where, in fact, arrest awaited him He was hustled off to France and took his seat in the National Convention as member for the Department of Calais In Paris he again escaped a violent death when a muddled gaoler chalked the guillotine mark on the inside of the door To Mary Wollstonecraft, Johnson was more of a father than the wastrel Wollstonecraft had ever been He published her Original Stories from Real Life in 1791 with six illustrations by Blake, and later in the same year A Vindication of the Rights of Women, which gained for her Walpole's soubriquet of "hyena in petticoats." Mary Wollstonecraft's later story is well known, her desertion by the American, Imlay, her strange alliance with Godwin, which perhaps gave her as full a happiness as her nature and bitter past experience allowed, and her death after the birth of the child who was to become Mary Shelley. To the period of the Johnson dinners belongs her passion for another of the guests, the flirtatious Fuseli. According to his biographer she wished to join the Fuseli household as a spiritual concubine, without interfering with Mrs. Fuseli's conjugal rights, and it has been suggested that Blake's poem "Mary" is a sympathetic reminiscence of Mary Wollstonecraft's candour. After Fuseli had rejected her love she went to France, where further unhappiness was in store for her.

Original

Godwin, whose cold intellect and lucid style exercised an unparalleled influence on the young men of his own and the succeeding generation, is said to have been antipathetic to Blake. He preached the progress of human perfectibility by means of the improvement of external conditions, and the inducement of rational opinions by education and argument: error must be exterminated by expostulation, not by punishment. His ideal, modified toward the end of his life, was a universal benevolence based on reason in which there was place neither for affection nor for gratitude. Blake's philanthropy was more impulsive. To one free-thinker and treatise-writer, who complained that his children were dinnerless, he lent forty pounds, a part of which was exhibited by his wife to the thrifty Catherine Blake in the shape of a very gorgeous dress. The name of this plunderer has not survived.

Holcroft, who had once been a stable-boy, and whose fragment of autobiography is better remembered than his plays or his labours as a reformer, was an associate with whom Blake must have been more in sympathy. And Holcroft's stories of his ill-treatment at Ascot, as a boy, may have had something to do with the vehemence of Blake's onslaught on the proprietor of Astley's circus. Tatham tells how

Blake was standing at one of his windows, which looked into Astley's premises (the man who established the theatre still called by his name), and saw a boy hobbling along with a log to his foot, such an one as is put on a horse or ass to prevent their straying. Blake called his wife and asked her for what reason that log could be placed upon the boy's foot. She answered that it must be for a punishment for some in-advertency. Blake's blood boiled, and his indignation surpassed his forbearance. He sallied forth, and demanded in no quiescent terms that the boy should be loosed, and that no Englishman should be subjected to those miseries, which he thought were inexcusable even towards a slave. After having succeeded in obtaining the boy's release in some way or other, he returned home. Astley by this time, having heard of Blake's interference came to his house and demanded, in an equally peremptory manner, by what authority he dare come athwart his method of jurisdiction. To which Blake replied with such warmth that blows were very nearly the consequence. The debate lasted long, but like all wise men whose anger is unavoidably raised, they ended in mutual forgiveness and mutual respect. Astley saw that his punishment was too degrading, and admired Blake for his humane sensibility, and Blake desisted from wrath when Astley was pacified.

There is no record of Blake's conversation at Johnson's social gatherings, but the opinions which he held at this time can be gathered from his annotations to Bishop Watson's An Apology for the Bible in a Series of Letters addressed to Thomas Paine. He did not publish these notes. "I have been commanded from Hell not to print this, as it is what our Enemies wish." He falls foul of the Bishop's "Serpentine Dissimulation." "I believe that the Bishop laughed at the Bible in his sleeve and so did Locke." Paine, Deist though he was, had done good service by attacking the perversions of Christ's words and acts and also the perversions of the Bible.

Christ died as an Unbeliever and if the Bishops had their will so would Paine see page 1 but he who speaks a word against the Son of man shall be forgiven. Let the Bishop prove that he has not spoken against the Holy Ghost, who in Paine strives with Christendom as in Christ he strove with the Jews.

The Bishop, according to Blake, gives up the case for the historical authenticity of the Bible by being ready to admit that Moses, Joshua, and Samuel may not have written the books ascribed to them.

If Moses did not write the history of his acts, it takes away the authority altogether, it ceases to be history & becomes a Poem of probable impossibilities, fabricated for pleasure, as moderns say, but I say by Inspiration.

Paine

Paine is, of course, one of the "moderns" He had said in The Age of Reason that

There is not throughout the whole book called the Bible, any word that describes to us what we call a poet, or any word that describes what we call poetry The case is that the word prophet, to which later times affixed a new idea, was the Bible word for poet, and the word prophesying meant the art of making poetry

For the Bishop this is tantamount to describing all prophets as "lying rascals" Blake's comment is

Prophets, in the modern sense of the word, have never existed Jonah was no prophet in the modern sense, for his prophecy of Nineveh failed Every honest man is a Prophet, he utters his opinion both of private & public matters Thus If you go on So, the result is So He never says, such a thing shall happen let you do what you will A Prophet is a Seer, not an Arbitrary Dictator It is a man's fault if God is not able to do him good, for he gives to the just & to the unjust, but the unjust reject his gift

Paine also understood the true nature of miracles better than the Bishop

Jesus could not do miracles where unbelief hindered, hence we must conclude that the man who holds miracles to be ceased puts it out of his own power to ever witness one The manner of a miracle being performed is in modern times considered as an arbitrary command of the agent upon the patient, but this is an impossibility, not a miracle, neither did Jesus ever do such a miracle Is it a greater miracle to feed five thousand men with five loaves than to overthrow all the armies of Europe with a small pamphlet? Look over the events of your own life & if you do not find that you have both done such miracles & lived by such you do not see as I do True, I cannot do a miracle thro' experiment & to domineer over & prove to others my superior power, as neither could Christ But I can & do work such as both astonish & comfort me & mine How can Paine, the worker of miracles, ever doubt Christ's in the above sense of the word miracle? But how can Watson ever believe the above sense of a miracle, who considers it as an arbitrary act of the agent upon an unbelieving patient, whereas the Gospel says that Christ could not do a miracle because of Unbelief?

If Christ could not do miracles because of Unbelief, the reason alledged by Priests for miracles is false, for those who believe want not to be confounded by miracles Christ & his Prophets & Apostles were not Ambitious miracle mongers

Here, as so often, Blake declares "the Gospel is Forgiveness of Sins & has No Moral Precepts" He asserts that "the Bishops never saw the Everlasting Gospel any more than than Tom Paine," and concludes "It appears to me Now that Tom Paine is a better Christian than the Bishop I have read this Book with attention & find that the Bishop has only hurt Paine's heel while Paine has broken his head The Bishop has not answer'd one of Paine's grand objections "

With these annotations may be compared those from Blake's copy of Bacon's Essays, probably written about the same time (1798), treating the philosopher with as little tenderness as the Bishop Unfortunately, the book cannot now be traced and Gilchrist only gives a few sentences The title-page was inscribed "Good advice for Satan's Kingdom " The most noteworthy of Gilchrist's quotations are the comment on Bacon's "Good thoughts are little better than good dreams," "Thought is act Christ's acts were nothing to Caesar's if this is not so," and that on "The increase of any state must be upon the foreigner," "The increase of a State, as of a man, is from internal improvement or intellectual acquirement Man is not improved by the hurt of another States are not improved at the expense of foreigners "

Two of Blake's later references to Bacon may be associated with these

Meer enthusiasm is the All in All! Bacon's Philosophy has Ruin'd England Bacon is only Epicurus over again

Bacon's Philosophy has Destroy'd [word cut away] Art & Science,
The Man who says that the Genius is not Born, but Taught—Is a Knave.

O Reader, behold the Philosopher's Grave!

He was born quite a Fool, but he died quite a Knave

But it would appear from Blake's America A Prophecy that he read Bacon's New Atlantis to some purpose

Blake was in sympathy with the reformers in their revolt against priest and king, against the oppression of the poor, slavery, and the merely legal sanctity of marriage. But all these good people were concerned with external liberty only, and were seeking to reinforce the tyranny of reason destructive of inner spiritual liberty They taught the fatal doctrine of repression, not perceiving that energy, passion, even excess, lead to wisdom, and that error cannot be corrected, but must be cast out Their criticisms of Christianity

Christianity were negative, and based on a literal interpretation of the scriptures, meaningless to the student of Swedenborg. It is useful and sometimes amusing in reading Blake's later books to look back upon his association with the Johnson set, many of his bugbears, or shall we say his Angels, obviously took shape at that hospitable table "I have always found that Angels have the vanity to speak of themselves as the only wise, this they do with a confident insolence sprouting from systematic reasoning." He embodied their error in Urizen, the false god of Reason, and cast it out fiercely with his pen.

But his sympathy with France was as genuine as theirs, nor was it limited to a red cap and prudent advice to the Calais member of the National Convention. Only one book remains of the poem on the French Revolution, which Blake probably began to write in the latter half of 1789. A page-proof of this, prepared for anonymous publication in 1791, was either withheld by Johnson's caution or withdrawn by Blake himself. It was not published till 1913. Swinburne, who read these proof-sheets, pronounced it "the only original work of its author worth little, or even nothing, consisting mainly of mere wind and splutter." This verdict from Blake's great champion is an aberration of criticism. Tremendous voices are audible above the tumult of Ossianic metaphor, voices whose speech is inspired by that imaginative sympathy which will not blame the individual, be he king or noble. Even the serpent-priest, the Archbishop of Paris, is vigorous and moving, while the eloquence of Orleans, "generous as mountains," as Blake supposed in selecting him as his own mouthpiece, is surpassed by that of the Duke of Burgundy, an imaginary figure who represents the drunkenness of battle.

Did Blake, finding that he had been too generous a prophet, destroy the remaining six books of his only prophetic work, in the accepted sense, after the September massacres? No trace of them has been found.

Whatever may have been the contents of the lost books of the French Revolution, or their scheme in Blake's mind if they were never written, he was not content to be merely a political revolutionary, but was feeling his way toward a subversive metaphysical doctrine. There are no letters for this period to aid in tracing his mental progress, but, fortunately, marginal notes on Lavater's Aphorisms and on two of Swedenborg's books take their place.

A translation of Lavater's Aphorisms was published in 1788 by Lavater's friend, Fuseli, with a frontispiece designed by Fuseli and engraved by Blake, whose annotations show that at the time when he was writing the Songs of Innocence he was using the work of the worthy Swiss as a spring-board for thought. Blake has written his name below that of Lavater, and has drawn the outline of a heart round the two names. He acted on the advice of the last Aphorism: "If you mean to know yourself, interline such of these aphorisms as affected you agreeably in reading, and set a mark to such as left a sense of uneasiness with you, and then show your copy to whom you please."

We have the authority of Fuseli, to whom he showed his notes, for saying that Blake, as a young man, may be known from them. Their autobiographical significance can only be fully appreciated by reading the Aphorisms, which to-day have lost their savour, and noting his comments, and the passages which he has underlined. The picture revealed is that of a man who prefers passion to cool villainy, active evil to passive good, a lover of laughter and downright speech, hating alike the sanctimonious and the sneerer. He venerates what is great and good in others, but cannot bear to be ignored, and so suspects himself both of egotism and of jealousy. Impulsive and emotional, he finds it difficult to form a calm and dispassionate judgment. This last defect shows itself in his relations with others: a good lover and a sound hater, he yet cannot afford to be judged by his friendships and his enmities because he errs in both, and it goes against the grain to forgive injuries. He thinks—and this is, perhaps, the explanation of those outrageous speeches in uncongenial company to which his friends bear witness—that a man may lie for his own pleasure, provided he does not by so doing harm another or betray a sacred trust. The indirect criticism of his own genius shows that he is beset by doubts doubts about the truth of his intuitions, and realizes that his difficulty in perfecting his work is a grave fault at the same time he is convinced that genius manifests itself in devotion to a task which none other can achieve His final comment is the most precise statement which Blake anywhere makes of the philosophy from which he developed his myths and his symbolic books

There is a strong objection to Lavater's principles (as I understand them) & that is He makes everything originate in its accident, he makes the vicious propensity not only a leading feature of the man, but the stamina on which all his virtues grow But as I understand Vice it is a Negative It does not signify what the laws of Kings & Priests have call'd Vice, we who are philosophers ought not to call the Staminial Virtues of Humanity by the same name that we call the omissions of intellect springing from poverty

Every man's leading propensity ought to be call'd his leading Virtue & his good Angel But the Philosophy of Causes and Consequences misled Lavater as it has all his Cotemporaries Each thing is its own cause & its own effect Accident is the omission of act in self & the hindering of act in another, This is Vice, but all Act is Virtue To hinder another is not an act, it is the contrary, it is a restraint on action both in ourselves & in the person hinder'd, for he who hinders another omits his own duty at the same time

Murder is Hindering Another

Theft is Hindering Another

Backbiting, Undermining, Circumventing, & whatever is Negative is Vice But the origin of this mistake in Lavater & his cotemporaries is, They suppose that Woman's Love is Sin, in consequence all the Loves & Graces with them are Sins

Blake, following the family tradition, was still a follower of Emanuel Swedenborg in 1789, the year in which the Songs of Innocence were engraved, the names of William and Catherine Blake appear in the minute book of the Great Eastcheap Swedenborgian Society He may even have seen the picturesque old Baron in the flesh, as he spent his eighty-fourth year in London, dying there in 1772 Swedenborg's accounts of his own visions, his belief in the spiritual symbolism of the material world and interpretation of the Bible in accordance with this belief, and his doctrine that Christ is the only God, had a lasting effect upon Blake's thought. Moreover, both point and support were given to Blake's rebellion against the old order by Swedenborg's announcement that 1757, the year of Blake's

own birth, was, in consequence of a Spiritual Last Judgment, the first year of a New Age in which mankind would regain moral freedom

His annotations to Swedenborg's, Wisdom of Angels concerning Divine Love and Divine Wisdom, which were also written about 1789, show his sympathy in such phrases as "the Whole of the New Church is in the Active Life & not in Ceremonies at all " He explains as against those who have misrepresented Swedenborg's meaning, that such may participate in Spiritual Wisdom "while in the Body," and the comment "he who Loves feels love descend into him & if he has wisdom may perceive it is from the Poetic Genius, which is the Lord," affirms the doctrine of his own tractate All Religions are One

But the writings of Swedenborg's Master, Jakob Boehme, the sixteenth-century German cobbler, which Blake read in Law's translation, contained a treasure of profounder thought, and induced a critical examination of Swedenborg's doctrines From Boehme Blake derived his belief that the creation of the material world was an Act of Mercy, because by its means complete destruction was intercepted and redemption became possible, that union with the Eternal can be attained only by annihilation of selfhood, and that man is himself infinite Two quotations from Boehme's writings will at least suggest how stimulating and congenial they must have been to the young Blake

If thou conceivest a small minute circle, as small as a grain of mustard seed, yet the Heart of God is wholly and perfectly therein and if thou art born in God, then there is in thyself (in the circle of thy life) the whole Heart of God undivided

The Son of God, the Eternal Word in the Father, who is the glance, or brightness, and the power of the light eternity, must become man and be born in you, if you will know God otherwise you are in the dark stable and go about groping

Unfortunately no copy of Law's translation annotated by Blake has yet come to light, but the two tiny tractates, There is no Natural Religion and All Religions are One, etched about 1788, show the impress of Boehme, their form being probably suggested by Lavater's Aphorisms Blake was quite quite sure that, whatever the failings of the Established Church, the noisy rationalism of his Deistic friends and acquaintances, Paine, Priestly, Godwin, and the rest, was not the promised path to moral freedom. Accordingly he exposes their limitations in the two series of There is no Natural Religion, concluding that "If it were not for the Poetic or Prophetic Character the Philosophic & Experimental would soon be at the ratio of all things & stand still, unable to do other than repeat the same dull round over again." But since man's perceptions are not, as the Deists wrongly held, limited by Sense, and his Desire is Infinite, "God becomes as we are, that we may be as he is."

The second tractate sets forth that All Religions are One inasmuch as they have one source, the True Man, who is the Poetic Genius. This doctrine stands out against the obscure and crowded background of his later myths.

Blake's second set of notes on Swedenborg, the annotations to his Wisdom of Angels Concerning Divine Providence, written about 1790, show that he was realizing the limitations of his former master, whom he now condemns as a predestinarian. "Predestination after this Life is more Abominable than Calvin's, & Swedenborg is such a Spiritual Predestinarian. Cursed Folly!"

The founder of the New Jerusalem Church followed other churches in appraising good and evil, in assigning reward and punishment.

O Swedenborg! strongest of men, the Samson shorn by the Churches, Showing the Transgressors in Hell, the proud Warriors in Heaven, Heaven as a Punisher, & Hell as One under Punishment

Swedenborg, the man of science, had not been fully emancipated by his visionary enlightenment late in life, he was still ensnared by logic and reason, as Blake put it, he had only conversed with angels, reasonable men, never with Devils, those inspired by Imagination. Moreover, his writings were not only conventional in spirit but a little ridiculous in form. So Blake began to scribble The Marriage of Heaven and Hell in a notebook, he had found his way through the dark, tangled woods of experience, and with a chuckle he entered upon the third stage of the Mystic Way.

This

This metaphor of the Mystic Way has been accepted as a useful graphic method of describing the spiritual history of those who reach the goal of their desire, union with the Eternal. Their absorption in this one aim, and their ultimate certainty that it has been fulfilled, sets them apart from others, and a study of their lives and writings shows that it is possible to recognize more or less well-defined psychological crises common to them all. Illumination, that is the renewal and increase of the first visionary intuition of the Eternal at "Conversion," did not come to Blake as a merely personal revelation, a peaceful reassurance after the suffering of Purgation, but in the guise of a subversive rebellion against established religion, morality, and art. Illumination banished doubt, but spelt Revolution.

Swinburne ranks The Marriage of Heaven and Hell as not only the greatest of Blake's books, but as "about the greatest produced by the Eighteenth Century in the line of high poetry and spiritual speculation." It is Blake's Gospel of Revolution. All his heresies may be traced to old sources, but they are presented in an original and provocative form. (The Just Man can no longer tread meekly in the Way of Holiness. Heaven has been usurped by the Angels, the hypocrites who passively obey the laws of reason. Energy the Eternal Delight, imagination, inspiration, impulse, is their Evil, and is punished with eternal torment by their God. They believe in the separate reality of the body and the soul, and that evil proceeds from the one, and good from the other. But the Just Man, become an outcast in his wrath, the Devil, the Genius, the Man in whom God Himself acts and is, knows that the body is only a portion of the soul discerned by the senses, and that if these, the doors of perception, are cleansed, everything will appear infinite as it is, and as the Eagle, the Genius, perceives it to be. No reconciliation is possible between the Angels and the Devils, between those who are in the bonds of reason, and those freed by imagination, the Poetic Genius. The Angels must be converted by Love and understanding of Christ, who was himself no mild slave of the decalogue. "Jesus was all virtue, and acted from impulse, not from Rules.") The Marriage of Heaven and

and Hell is fragmentary in form, but the Infernal Wisdom of the Proverbs of Hell, the dinner party (a satire on Swedenborg's visions), at which Isaiah and Ezekiel uphold the righteousness of honest indignation and the force of an imaginative faith, the excursions with the angel whose dogmatic beliefs and metaphysical arguments reveal nothing but the rottenness of education, religion, and social life among those who can only perceive and inhabit the material world of space and time, all attack conventional religion and ethics. In the tractate All Religions are One, Blake had stated that all men participate in the Poetic Genius, but now he emphasizes the division between sheep and goats, and proclaims the War of the Devils upon the Angels. "One Law for the Lion & Ox is Oppression."

All the known copies of The Marriage of Heaven and Hell include "A Song of Liberty." It has been suggested that this "Song" is wrongly regarded as a separate poem, and is really the last section of The Marriage of Heaven and Hell. This theory is based on the continuous pagination, the similarity of lettering, the balance which the Song at the end would give to the "argument" at the beginning, and the fact that the title does not differ materially in appearance from those of other sections of The Marriage.

Blake's reputation as a poet rests on a selection from the Poetical Sketches, Songs of Innocence and of Experience, and on some of the lyrics in the Rossetti and Pickering manuscripts. Even The Marriage of Heaven and Hell finds comparatively few readers. Still fewer have attempted the symbolic books and most of these have rejected them as incomprehensible if not the works of a madman. How explain the fact that the greater number of Blake's readers—genuine admirers of his genius though they be—do not even know the titles of many of his writings? Does the fault lie with them or with Blake? Is the gulf between the lyrics and the symbolic books impassable save by a few adventurers, and what rare flowers do they pluck from those terrific crags?

Had Blake been only a metaphysical poet he might have been content with the synthesis of the contrary states which which he celebrated in The Marriage of Heaven and Hell, embodying his discovery in a series of lyrics such as the later "Everlasting Gospel." The mind of the metaphysician at rest, he might even have returned to perfect one or other of the experiments of the Poetical Sketches, forestalling the classicism of Landor, or setting free the romantic spirit imprisoned in the verse of Collins. The mysticism of the Songs of Innocence and of Experience as apprehended by most of Blake's readers without the light reflected from his later writings, might have been merely a passing phase, a picturesque mode of poetical expression. But Blake's mysticism was an overwhelming personal experience, giving rise to an intense spiritual desire to which everything else must be sacrificed. The symbolic books are the wings with which he clove through his own darkness. In them he aimed at transcending the limits of the world of space and time by means of conceptions which should convey eternal truths. As an artist, despite his all-pervading mysticism, he received enthusiastic recognition from his contemporaries—Romney and Lawrence, Fuseli and Flaxman—and from the group of younger artists headed by John Linnell. As a lyrical poet he was acclaimed by Lamb and Landor, by Wordsworth and Coleridge and Southey. But the writer of the symbolic books was alone from first to last. The tares of obscurity flourish in intellectual solitude.

Apart from the blind instinct compelling him to seek salvation at any cost, what is Blake's own account of his intentions? While writing the earlier symbolic books, he did not, it would seem, despair of contemporary sympathy, but later he was avowedly addressing the Young Men of the New Age. To them he appeals to "Go put off Holiness And put on Intellect," for them he writes "allegory addressed to the Intellectual powers, while it is altogether hidden from the Corporeal Understanding." He did not believe that God revealed himself to saintly fools, nor that He could be approached through reasoned argument by means of philosophical propositions. Eternal truths could be comprehended only by "Imagination heightened to vision." Born himself in the first year of the New Age, he hoped to found a school of mystics to whom his conceptions ceptions should be intelligible But the young men were as apathetic as their predecessors

Blake's failure may be explained in the terms of a conversation between Wordsworth and Crabb Robinson Wordsworth expressed the opinion that Coleridge's talents were even greater than his genius, and that his excellence lay in the union of so much talent with so much genius If Crabb Robinson's distinction be accepted, and it was doubtless derived from the most authentic German sources, that "genius is properly creation and production from within and talent is the faculty of appropriation from without and assimilation," it may be said that Blake, though supreme in genius, is deficient in talent Without the mediation of talent which facilitates contact with the minds of others, genius stands aloof, difficult of approach Talent tides over the inevitable shallows where inspiration has failed, and Blake's deficiency is accountable for the marked unevenness of his work both as poet and artist Genius, self-absorbed, lacks the power of detached criticism supplied by talent, thus Blake is often strangely blind to the actual results achieved both by himself and others, because he creates mentally what he or they intended His declaration "I must Create a System, or be enslav'd by another Man's I will not Reason & Compare my business is to Create" is indicative of this weakness, but it is also true that he was impelled to make his own myths by lack of suitable material in which to embody his ideas Greek thought as he knew it, mainly, it may be assumed, through the writings of the Platonists, Henry More and Thomas Taylor, satisfied neither the rebel nor the artist More, like Blake, was "Incola Coeli in Terra, an Inhabitant of Paradise and Heaven upon Earth—I sport with the Beasts of the Earth, the Lion licks my Hand like a Spaniel, and the Serpent sleeps upon my Lap, and stings me not I play with the Fowls of Heaven, and the Birds of the Air sit singing on my Fist " But he distrusted enthusiasm and "Phansy" become "Presentifical," he was satisfied with the God of the Timaeus, now the Father of Christ Blake, whose irritability over what he failed to assimilate again marks his lack of talent, rejects the Greeks as exalting reason and belittling inspiration tion "The Greek Muses are daughters of Mnemosyne or Memory, and not of Inspiration or Imagination" "The Gods of Greece and Egypt were Mathematical Diagrams—See Plato's Works"

Rome & Greece swept Art into their maw & destroy'd it, a Warlike State can never produce Art It will Rob & Plunder & accumulate into one place, & Translate & Copy & Buy & sell & Criticise, but not Make Grecian is Mathematic Form Gothic is Living Form Mathematic Form is Eternal in the Reasoning Memory Living Form is Eternal Existence

A constant student of the Bible and, like his masters, Swedenborg and Boehme, a firm believer in the symbolism of the Old Testament, Blake—unless indeed his Designs for the Book of Job be counted among the symbolic books—failed to find material in them adapted to the expression of his spiritual experiences and revolutionary ideas The general notion of his mythical cosmogony is, on the other hand, plainly influenced by, although not directly derived from, Paradise Lost

Although Blake created his own myths and added symbols to those common to other mystics, he did not, apart from these, attempt to create or even select any special phraseology for the expression of his mystical ideas A bitter opponent of conventional Christianity, he yet often adopts the religious language of Bunyan and of the followers of Wesley and Whitefield, both in his letters and in his symbolic books The explanation of this is undoubtedly that they stood for faith as opposed to rationalistic questionings Faith for Blake implied in itself some measure of insight, and therefore the language of evangelical fervour spelt symbolic truth

The form of the symbolic books is another stumbling block The poet who had been so bold and felicitous in his prosodic innovations never entirely lost his lyrical gift, but for the earlier symbolic books he adopted the septenary, already used with an iambic basis in Thel and Tiriel, and with an anapaestic basis in The French Revolution As the modulation of the septenary had been more lyrical in the Book of Thel, so it changes with the subject matter of the earlier symbolic books, becoming, for instance, more rich and varied in the Daughters of Albion.

In

In three of the later Lambeth books, however, Urizen, Los, and Ahania, Blake substituted for the septenary a new triple-beat measure, but his treatment of it is even freer than his treatment of the longer metre, and it is only by taking the obstacles—long vowels and massed consonants—at a gallop that the reader can keep the rhythm clear.

In the more poetic passages of Milton, where he returns to the septenary, some of which will be quoted in a later chapter, the tendency is still to maintain metrical regularity, but, for the rest, the process described in the preface to Jerusalem has already begun.

When this verse [i.e., the septenary] was first dictated to me I consider'd a Monotonous Cadence, like that used by Milton & Shakspeare and all writers of English Blank Verse, derived from the modern bondage of Rhyming, to be a necessary and indispensable part of Verse. But I soon found that in the mouth of a true Orator such monotony was not only awkward, but as much a bondage as rhyme itself. I therefore have produc'd a variety in every line, both of cadences & number of syllables, Every word and every letter is studied and put into its fit place, the terrific numbers are reserved for the terrific parts, the mild & gentle for the mild & gentle parts, and the prosaic for inferior parts, all are necessary to each other. Poetry Fetter'd Fetters the Human Race. Nations are Destroy'd or Flourish in proportion as Their Poetry, Painting and Music are Destroy'd or Flourish! The Primeval State of Man was Wisdom, Art and Science.

In Jerusalem, accordingly, all metrical basis disappears save in the occasional lyrics and on plate 77, where he breaks into blank verse, again showing a lack of facility in handling it. It must be left to those who claim Blake as the first vers-librist to save the poet as they may; others can still admire the fire and eloquence of the orator, as he now describes himself.

Obscure mythology and inharmonious prosody bar the access to the symbolic books. At a first reading they will appear to most people—and many would never approach them but for their illuminated printing—a smouldering rubbish heap, dimly lit by flickering flames of sense and beauty, but the heap will seem so large and the little flames so rare that most of them will pass it by. The few who read and re-read gradually acquire the conviction that there is no nonsense here, that Blake never wrote a word without a meaning perfectly definite to himself. This conviction may be strong enough to dispel the must by which he had been surrounded, but the must only drifts over from him to enwreath his readers, and many obscurities still remain. The step which should have been the first, has only just been taken. Ninety-eight years after Blake's death Mr Geoffrey Keynes edited the first complete and reliable text of Blake's writings. At least we now know what Blake himself wrote, freed from the tinkering of subsequent poets and admirers.

Another source of obscurity is that the symbolic books are largely spiritual autobiography, demanding as gloss a detailed knowledge of Blake's life. The reliable data are unfortunately rather meagre: the letters and prose writings, invaluable though they be, are unevenly distributed, and for several important years any such record is almost lacking. If, for instance, we knew only of Blake's gratitude to Flaxman for his introduction to Hayley and nothing of the consequent friction between Blake and Hayley a part of Milton would be incomprehensible, or an interpretation would have to be constructed without the essential facts, and would certainly be false. Fresh knowledge about Blake's life might therefore throw light on obscure passages in his writings, or even alter well established interpretations. The symbolism personal to himself, such as his use of places, cannot, without a knowledge of Blake's particular associations, be the subject of more than plausible guess-work. Take, for example, the lines

The Corner of Broad Street weeps, Poland Street languishes,
To Great Queen Street & Lincoln's Inn all is distress & woe

The more general symbolism presents another difficulty: it is so fluid that any dictionary of Blake's symbols must be used judiciously. Hence, although the best qualified critics may agree as to his main metaphysical doctrines, there will remain large loopholes for difference of interpretation and difference of emphasis. Blake can be understood only in so far as his spirit enters into the reader, and every one will tend to believe in the efficacy of his own particular communion.

Blake's use of sex symbolism, in particular, will be stressed in its more literal sense or given a deeper meaning in accordance with the reader's habit of mind, ignored it cannot cannot be Blake may be readily pinned through the wings as a choice specimen in the Freudian Museum, the Oedipus complex, far from needing patient unravelling, positively prances through his pages. The paucity of information about his relations to his father and mother is also an asset to readers of this school. But even those, who are more interested in understanding the books than in attributing complexes to the writer, will differ widely in their interpretation of particular passages: some will give a symbolic sexual significance to words or phrases which seems gratuitous to others or will insist on an application to the problems of sex when other readers will perceive only a meaning on the level where, for Blake, sex does not exist.

Blake accepted Boehme's doctrine that the Eternal Man is androgynous, and believed that sex belongs only to the divided world of time and space

Eternity shudder'd when they saw Man begetting his likeness
On his own divided image

Humanity knows not of Sex

The Sexual is Threefold, the Human is Fourfold

In the etching, which has been replaced in all but two copies of the Songs of Innocence and of Experience by the poem "To Tirzah," Blake represents the regenerated, spiritual body as an androgynous figure borne upward by cherubs.

"Sexual" is sometimes equivalent to emotional, and corresponds to the special attribute of Blake's "threefold vision"

Now I a fourfold vision see,
And a fourfold vision is given to me,
'Tis fourfold in my supreme delight
And threefold in soft Beulah's night
And twofold Always. May God us keep
From Single vision & Newton's sleep!

Single vision is purely material perception; in twofold vision an intellectual value is added, in threefold an emotional, and in fourfold a spiritual. But the earthly man can know eternity only through, through, be it noted, not with with, the senses, and the fifth sense, touch, is identified by Blake with sex. The fairy hidden in the tulip of Rasselas whose streaks Johnson had declined to count and Reynolds had generalized away, the fairy who will only sing when a poet makes him tipsy with "a cup of sparkling poetic fancies" sang this to Blake

"Five windows light the cavern'd Man thro' one he breathes the air,

"Thro' one hears music of the spheres, thro' one the eternal vine
"Flourishes, that he may receive the grapes, thro' one can look
"And see small portions of the Eternal World that ever groweth, "Thro' one himself pass out what time he please, but he will not,
"For stolen joys are sweet & bread eaten in secret pleasant "

So sang a Fairy, mocking, as he sat on a streak'd Tulip, Thinking none saw him when he ceas'd I started from the trees
And caught him in my hat, as boys knock down a butterfly
"How know you this," said I, "Small Sir? where did you learn this song?"

Seeing himself in my possession, thus he answer'd me
"My Master, I am yours! command me, for I must obey "

"Then, tell me, what is the material world, and is it dead?"
He, laughing, answer'd "I will write a book on leaves of flowers,
"If you will feed me on love-thoughts & give me now & then
"A cup of sparkling poetic fancies, so, when I am tipsie,
"I'll sing to you to this soft lute, and show you all alive
"The world, when every particle of dust breathes forth its joy "

I took him home in my warm bosom as we went along Wild flowers I gather'd, & he shew'd me each eternal flower
He laugh'd aloud to see them whimper because they were pluck'd
They hover'd round me like a cloud of incense when I came Into my parlour and sat down and took my pen to write,
My Fairy sat upon the table & dictated EUROPE

The Fairy remembers how Raphael, an Angel, speaking to Adam "with contracted brow," warned him against the fifth sense. But the Fairy knows better than the Angel the fifth sense, if its pleasures be not the stolen and secret joys of lust, may, should man so will it, be the great portal of imagination, and while still a dweller in this world of division he may become most nearly the Eternal Man

The Imagination is not a State it is the Human Existence itself Affection or Love becomes a State when divided from Imagination.

"And the strong pinion'd Eagle bore the fire of heaven

in the night season " In Milton there is a drawing of a man and a woman lying on a shelf of rock secure above the sea of space and time, above them hovers the eagle of inspiration, on whom the man's eyes are fixed This drawing and the fairy's words give Blake's account of the matter his biographers complete the story Tatham tells how "he was very much accustomed to get out of his bed in the night to write for hours, and return to bed for the rest of the night after having committed to paper pages and pages of his mysterious phantasies " Gilchrist quotes a testimony to his need for his wife's presence

"She would get up in the night, when he was under his very fierce inspirations, which were as if they would tear him asunder, while he was yielding himself to the Muse, or whatever else it could be called, sketching and writing And so terrible a task did this seem to be, that she had to sit motionless and silent, only to stay him mentally, without moving hand or foot, this for hours, and night after night "

Another visionary has said that "Desire is hidden identity " Blake's desire is a reaching out toward spiritual unity "The voice of the Devil" had announced that

Energy is the only life, and is from the Body, and Reason is the bound or outward circumference of Energy

Those who restrain desire, do so because theirs is weak enough to be restrained, and the restrainer or reason usurps its place & governs the unwilling

And being restrain'd, it by degrees becomes passive, till it is only the shadow of desire

Hence Blake's hatred of repression which frustrates the "hidden identity " In A Vision of the Last Judgment he has said

Men are admitted into Heaven not because they have curbed & govern'd their Passions or have No Passions, but because they have Cultivated their Understandings The Treasures of Heaven are not Negations of Passion, but Realities of Intellect, from which all the Passions Emanate Uncurbed in their Eternal Glory The Fool shall not enter into Heaven let him be ever so Holy Holiness is not The Price of Entrance into heaven Those who are cast out are All Those who, having no Passions of their own because No Intellect, Have spent their lives in Curbing & Governing other People's by the Various arts of Poverty & Cruelty of all kinds

Blake believed that it was possible to maintain a life of the spirit illuminated by these eternal truths, which appear distorted distorted in the divided world of space and time "What are called the vices in the natural world are the highest sublimities in the spiritual world" But he recognized the limitations of that other earthly life which men must also lead while in the body.

Many persons, such as Paine and Voltaire with some of the Ancient Greeks, say "we will not converse concerning Good & Evil, we will live in Paradise and Liberty" You may do so in Spirit, but not in the Mortal Body as you pretend, till after the Last Judgment, for in Paradise they have no Corporeal & Mortal Body—that originated with the Fall & was call'd Death & cannot be removed but by a Last Judgment While we are in the World of Mortality we Must Suffer The whole Creation Groans to be deliver'd, there will be as many Hypocrites born as Honest Men, & they will always have superior Power in Mortal Things You cannot have Liberty in this World without what you call Moral Virtue, & you cannot have Moral Virtue without the Slavery of that half of the Human Race who hate what you call Moral Virtue

By temperament and conviction alike Blake was the enemy of asceticism, he wrote to George Cumberland

Now you will, I hope, show all the family of Antique Borers that Peace & Plenty & Domestic Happiness is the Source of Sublime Art, & prove to the Abstract Philosophers that Enjoyment & not Abstinence is the food of Intellect

And again, in Jerusalem

And many of the Eternal Ones laughed after their Manner
 "Have you known the Judgment that is arisen among the "Zoas of Albion, where a Man dare hardly to embrace
 "His own Wife for the terrors of Chastity that they call
 "By the name of Morality?"

His own lack of austerity is shown amusingly by his pleasure in Mrs Blake's luck when, seeking her fortune in Bysshe's Art of Poetry, she happened on an exuberant description of lovers' joys by Aphra Behn In spite of his audacious speeches and writings the only breath of scandal touching his life comes from a story, based, perhaps, on some wild saying of his own or reference to Mary Wollstonecraft's passion for Fuseli, that he proposed to add a concubine to his household If it be true its ending is significant Mrs Blake cried and he gave up the idea Blake's remark that spectators of his "Last Judgment" will not believe that it was "Painted by a Madman,

or by one in a State of Outrageous Manners" suggests that he resented this or some similar charge as much as he did that of madness. Mr. Crabb Robinson indeed confides to his diary, and he protects the innocence of his housemaid by confiding it in German, that on the occasion when Blake asserted that he had committed many murders he also advocated community of women. It will be remembered that Dr. Johnson often thought how he would clothe a seraglio. Blake's day-dream was bolder and less personal. He dreamt, it would seem, of a time when the return of the Golden Age was very near, when human nature had so changed that selfhood, jealousy, and lust were banished from the earth. Meanwhile he fiercely condemned the repression of natural instincts and desires because he believed in their purity, and because "thought is act," whereas repression leads to hypocrisy. False love that "drinks another as a sponge drinks water" depends for its gratification upon the mechanical rules of religion and morality, asking with Bromion

And is there not one law for both the lion and the ox?
And is there not eternal fire and eternal chains
To bind the phantoms of existence from eternal life?

But the only restraint on freedom must come from love itself, love inspired by imagination, and therefore pitiful and forgiving

I thought Love liv'd in the hot sun shine,
But O, he lives in the Moony light!
I thought to find Love in the heat of day,
But sweet Love is the Comforter of Night

Seek Love in the Pity of others' Woe,
In the gentle relief of another's care,
In the darkness of night & the winter's snow,
In the naked & outcast, Seek Love there!

Blake's accounts of his visions have led some critics to suppose that he suffered from hallucinations, or even that he was a medium subject to supermundane control. He himself constantly explained that he saw "in imagination" or "here," tapping his forehead, and that he only possessed a power common to others, if they chose to exercise it. Linnell comments that Varley, for whom Blake drew the famous visionary heads, believed in the actual presence of

of the "sitters" in a sense which was not shared by Blake himself. Blake says in A Descriptive Catalogue

The connoisseurs and artists who have made objections to Mr B's mode of representing spirits with real bodies, would do well to consider that the Venus, the Minerva, the Jupiter, the Apollo, which they admire in Greek statues are all of them representations of spiritual existences, of Gods immortal, to the mortal perishing organ of sight, and yet they are embodied and organized in solid marble. Mr B requires the same latitude, and all is well. The Prophets describe what they saw in Vision as real and existing men, whom they saw with their imaginative and immortal organs, the Apostles the same, the clearer the organ the more distinct the object. A Spirit and a Vision are not, as the modern philosophy supposes, a cloudy vapour, or a nothing: they are organized and minutely articulated beyond all that the mortal and perishing nature can produce. He who does not imagine in stronger and better lineaments, and in stronger and better light than his perishing and mortal eye can see, does not imagine at all. The painter of this work asserts that all his imaginations appear to him infinitely more perfect and more minutely organized than anything seen by his mortal eye. Spirits are organized men.

There is only one instance recorded in which a Vision assumed an outward form uncontrolled by imagination. Gilchrist states that "When talking on the subject of ghosts, he was wont to say they did not appear much to imaginative men, but only to common minds, who did not see the finer spirits. A ghost was a thing seen by the gross bodily eye, a vision, by the mental. 'Did you ever see a ghost?' asked a friend. 'Never but once,' was the reply. And it befell thus. Standing one evening at his garden-door in Lambeth, and chancing to look up, he saw a horrible grim figure, 'scaly, speckled, very awful,' stalking downstairs towards him. More frightened than ever before or after, he took to his heels, and ran out of the house."

Does Blake's own explanation meet the case, and did he merely cultivate or possess ordinary powers to an extraordinary degree? In the first place he clearly had, like all artists, the power of visualizing what he had actually seen and of giving visual form to his ideas.¹ Most people possess this power to some extent, the complete absence of it would be abnormal, and many can call up at will, or on occasion, a clear presentment of their friends and enemies, living or dead. This power is apt to be increased by any special emotion, and even to escape the control of the imagination, so that they believe the person of whom they are thinking to be present in bodily form. Again, though this is less common, the imagination may be so stimulated by something actually seen that the percipient temporarily loses the power of discriminating between what he sees and what he imagines. The tree and lawn of a town garden are for him a wood and meadows until he returns to dispel the illusion. Blake, it would seem, except in that one instance, never confused spiritual vision with that of the "gross bodily eye."

At one of Mrs. Aders' evening parties he described how "the other evening, taking a walk, I came to a meadow, and at the further corner of it I saw a fold of lambs. Coming nearer, the ground blushed with flowers, and the wattled cote and its woolly tenants were of an exquisite pastoral beauty. But I looked again, and it proved to be no living flock, but beautiful sculpture." Artists will not need his explanation to the inquiring lady that he had seen the sculpture here, touching his forehead, and many other people must have hung in the galleries of the mind pictures which are not mere direct visual memories, but works of art, of things seen in a moment of imagination, perhaps after the eye and brain have been stimulated by some picture or poem. Everyone must have shared the Blakes' experience of seeing figures in the fire, and understand Blake's saying to Richmond "I can look at a knot in a piece of wood till I am frightened at it." Further it should be noted that Blake's visionary heads were drawn in the late evening, and that he often made visionary sketches at night. This suggests another perfectly normal experience—that of hypnagogic images, things seen on the verge of sleep. Some people may not see these images at all, or only when ill or tired. Others welcome their coming as the customary herald of sleep. For some the darkness fashions itself into heads or forms of no special significance, like those seen on a discoloured wall. For others they seem to convey a message from the unconscious mind—a scene, perhaps, which may even have a word, or part of a word, written across the sky. Others—and their experience more closely resembles Blake's—are suddenly shown, as it were, pictures from a magic lantern, representing nothing they have actually seen—some exciting incident, figures as restless as Blake's sitters, unknown peoples, Greeks, Romans, and others, going about their occupations, and beautiful strange flowers. Most people are apt to ignore or minimize all such occurrences, either from the fear of being thought abnormal, or because they do not regard them as of any practical importance. Yet carefully considered these normal experiences go far to support Blake's contention that there was nothing unusual in the nature of his powers. But he exercised them in such a way as to become a freeman of both worlds without confusing his spiritual and earthly dwelling-places. Analogous experiences are described in The Candle of Vision, and the author also keeps his footing firmly in both worlds. A. E. is a believer in the "world memory," and those who see hypnagogic images of the magic-lantern variety will be tempted to entertain this hypothesis. The following passage from A Descriptive Catalogue implies that Blake believed himself to possess this power.

The two pictures of Nelson and Pitt are compositions of a mythological cast, similar to those Apotheoses of Persian, Hindoo, and Egyptian Antiquity, which are still preserved on rude monuments, being copies from some stupendous originals now lost or perhaps buried till some happier age. The Artist having been taken in vision into the ancient republics, monarchies, and patriarchates of Asia has seen those wonderful originals, called in the Sacred Scriptures the Cherubim, which were sculptured and painted on walls of Temples, Towers, Cities, Palaces, and erected in the highly cultivated States of Egypt, Moab, Edom, Aram, among the Rivers of Paradise, being originals from which the Greeks and Etrurians copied Hercules Farnese, Venus of Medici, Apollo Belvidere, and all the grand works of ancient art. These were executed in a very superior style to those justly admired copies, being with their accompaniments terrific and grand in the highest degree. The Artist has endeavoured to emulate the grandeur of those seen in his vision, and to apply it to modern Heroes, on a smaller scale.

Those wonderful originals seen in my visions, were some of them one hundred feet in height, some were painted as pictures, and some carved as basso relievos, and some as groupes of statues, all containing mythological and recondite meaning, where more is meant than meets the eye

Blake's frequent references to his visions in company not capable of understanding him or them, naturally led to the state of affairs thus described by Gilchrist "In society, people would disbelieve and exasperate him, would set upon the gentle yet fiery-hearted mystic, and stir him up into being extravagant, out of a mere spirit of opposition. Then he would say things on purpose to startle, and make people stare. In the excitement of conversation he would exaggerate his peculiarities of opinion and doctrine, would express a floating notion or fancy in an extreme way, without the explanation or qualification he was, in reality, well aware it needed, taking a secret pleasure in the surprise and opposition such views aroused."

It may be surmised that earnest persons like Mr. Crabb Robinson also had a provocative effect. Moreover, it is possible that Blake retained some of the characteristics of the fantasy life of a child, who is easily stimulated to embroider his story by further imaginings. He says that he has seen a fairy. Ask if she was wearing a scarlet cap. "Of course," he will reply, "and a green cloak with a big gold button."

Blake seems also to have had some power of imaginative hearing. As a boy he heard the chant of a phantom procession in Westminster Abbey; as a man he speaks of "the sound of harps which I hear before the Sun's rising." It may well be that he heard Homer and Moses, Dante and Milton, Jesus and Socrates talk with him, in as true a sense as he saw their visionary forms. This, again, only implies the possession in a greater degree of a normal power. Some hear music when they read a score, others hear an absent voice reply to an unspoken question. It is interesting to note that Southey, a thoughtful though unsympathetic observer, arrived at this explanation after a long visit to Blake. "Whoever has had what is sometimes called the vapours, and seen faces and figures pass before his closed eyes when he is lying sleepless in bed, can very well understand how Blake saw what he painted. I am sure I can, from this experience, and from like experience can tell how sounds are heard which have had no existence but but in the brain that produced them "

The notion that, so far as the symbolic books are concerned, Blake was an automatic writer, arose from ignorance of his manuscripts (now dispelled by Mr Keynes' edition of the Writings), from lack of perception that the lyrics were also the work of a mystic, and from his own phraseology

"I write," Blake informed Crabb Robinson, with whom his relations are fully discussed in a later chapter, "when commanded by the spirits and the moment I have written I see the words fly abt the room in all directions It is then published & the Spirits can read " Again he told Butts that he had written "from immediate Dictation, twelve or sometimes twenty or thirty lines at a time, without Premeditation & even against my Will, the Time it has taken in writing was thus rendered Non Existent, & an immense Poem Exists which seems to be the Labour of a long Life, all produc'd without Labour or Study "

The hypothesis of automatic script is not only superfluous, but is clearly disproved by correction during first drafts, as well as by later revision Had Blake literally believed that he wrote every word by the command of the spirits, correction would have been obviously a profanity The preface to Jerusalem already quoted is a flat contradiction of the theory, so is his address in the First Book of Milton to the Daughters of Beulah, who dwell on the third plane, commanding emotional as well as intellectual and direct vision

Daughters of Beulah! Muses who inspire the Poet's Song,

* * * *

Come into my hand,

By your mild power descending down the Nerves of my right arm
From out the Portals of my Brain, where by your ministry
The Eternal Great Humanity Divine planted his Paradise,
And in it caus'd the Spectres of the Dead to take sweet forms
In likeness of himself

The spirits were only an emphatic variation on the popular invocation to the Muse, marking the particularity and force of the inspiration Unlike his modest contemporary who wrote "Permit the muse to dictate, she means well," Blake makes no apology, and his comment on the following following passage in Reynold's seventh Discourse shows clearly what he meant by dictation. Reynolds wrote "To understand literally these metaphors or ideas expressed in poetical language seems to be equally absurd as to conclude, that because painters sometimes represent poets writing from the dictates of a little winged boy or genius, that this same genius did really inform him in a whisper what he was to write, and that he is himself but a mere machine, unconscious of the operations of his own mind." Blake annotates this with "How very Anxious Reynolds is to Disprove & Contemn Spiritual Perception!"

The charge of madness has been brought against Blake both during his lifetime and since his death. He has himself said all that it is necessary to say in the first "Memorable Fancy," where he describes his collection of the Proverbs of Hell, "as I was walking among the fires of hell, delighted with the enjoyments of Genius, which to Angels look like torment and insanity." None of his intimate friends thought him mad. Neither will any "devil" who has studied his works. A sympathetic reader of the letters must hear the very voice of the man and feel his essential sanity in spite of eccentricities and whimsicalities. In a letter to Hayley he used the word madness of himself "Dear Sir, excuse my enthusiasm or rather madness, for I am really drunk with intellectual vision whenever I take a pencil or graver into my hand, even as I used to be in my youth." Only in this sense is the word "mad" permissible, but mystics and other strongly imaginative people may be justly described as unstable, because they slip without warning from the world of time and space into the eternal world. And it would be well for those who are so eager to charge genius with madness to remember that they lay themselves open to the suspicion of being mentally defective.

"Madman" I have been call'd "Fool" they call thee
I wonder which they Envy, Thee or Me?

CHAPTER IV

LAMBETH

*I must Create a System or be enslav'd by another Man's
I will not Reason & Compare my business is to Create*

THERE IS NO record of Blake's relations with his mother after childhood. She died in 1792, and the following year he left the neighbourhood of the old home, where she had been living with his brother James, for 13 Hercules Buildings, Lambeth, described by Tatham as "a pretty, clean house of eight or ten rooms." In the strip of garden grew a vine with luxuriant leaves and tiny fruit. This vine, Blake's favourite symbol, was never pruned. Is this fact in itself another symbol? Did he feel that his critics set too high a value on a little dish of ripe grapes? The vine veiled an arbour, the scene of an incident related by Gilchrist on the authority of Blake's new friend and patron, Thomas Butts.

"Mr Butts calling one day found Mr and Mrs Blake sitting in this summer-house, freed from 'those troublesome disguises' which have prevailed since the Fall. 'Come in!' cried Blake, 'it's only Adam and Eve, you know!'" Husband and wife had been reciting passages from Paradise Lost, in character, and the garden of Hercules Buildings had to represent the Garden of Eden."

This story, although in itself of little or no importance, has been the subject of impassioned controversy. Swinburne blew a furious blast on the trumpet of Victorian propriety.

Mr Linnell, the truest friend of Blake's age and genius, has assured me—and has expressed a wish that I should make public his assurance—that the legend of Blake and his wife, sitting as Adam and Eve in their garden, is simply a legend—to those who knew them, repulsive and absurd, based probably, if on any foundation at all, on some rough and rapid expression of Blake's in the heat and flush of friendly talk, to the effect (it may be) that such a thing, if one chose to do it, would be in itself innocent and righteous—wrong or strange only in the eyes of a world whose views and whose deeds were strange and

wrong So far Blake would probably have gone, and so far his commentators need not fear to go But one thing does certainly seem to me loathsome and condemnable, the imputation of such a charge as has been brought against Blake on this matter, without ground and without excuse The oral flux of fools, being as it is a tertian or quotidian malady or ague of the tongue among their kind, may deserve pity or may not, but does assuredly demand rigid medical treatment The words or thoughts of a fine thinker and a free speaker, falling rather upon than into the ear of a servile and supine fool, will probably in all times bring forth such fruit as this By way of solace a compensation for the folly which he half perceives and half admits, the fool must be allowed his little jest and his little lie Only when it passes into tradition and threatens to endure is it worth while to set foot on it

Mr Ellis portentously queries the details as though the precarious life of his Real Blake hung upon the answers

He [Gilchrist] hints much and tells little He suggests that Blake and his wife were stark naked in public, and would even invite a friend to see them so together But there are several things that he does not tell us

The first is whether he received this story as he gives it from Mr Butts, or from people who "retailed it about town"

The second is that he does not say whether Butts walked up to the entrance of the summer-house uninvited and saw Mr and Mrs Blake before Blake spoke to him, though, from the usual nature of summer-houses, we are able to conjecture this, while Blake's speech seems not to have been an invitation but merely made to cover the embarrassment shown by his indiscreet and intrusive friend

The third that we are not told is whether Blake and his wife had gone naked all down to that summer-house from their own door—it was at the end of the garden—or had disrobed there, a thing which it is clear that they had a perfect right to do

The fourth is that we are not told whether the couple were naked at all, a question which the title of this picture, Unto Adam and his Wife did the Lord make coats of skin, leaves at least open

The fifth is that, though this story was extensively retailed for years before Linnell knew Blake, and though when Linnell did know him he disbelieved it, we are not told whether Linnell's disbelief was due to the very natural cause that he had asked Blake whether it was true, and that Blake had said, "Of course not"

This last query has been disposed of by Linnell's own note showing that he thought Blake must have mentioned such an incident to him had it occurred Samuel Palmer also dismissed it as apocryphal on the ground that it was unlike Blake, whom, be it noted, he did not meet till 1824

Were the story true, says Mr Ellis, the indiscretion of Butts is its worst feature

He remains the only person really disgraced by it. Gilchrist is but lightly smirched in comparison. After all, Blake and his wife were married. And there is still the question of the "coats of skin made by the Lord."

He is, however, inclined to reject it on the ground that Mrs. Blake's polite messages to Butts in Blake's letters to him do not show "the smallest trace of such familiarity as must necessarily have sprung from that scene in the summer-house at Hercules Buildings if there had been anything in it, such as Gilchrist implies, of the nature of a spicy secret."

Nakedness will always seem an obvious and easy escape from convention, and Rousseau-manie had given it a certain vogue. Dr. Franklin, a votary of the cult, startled a servant bringing a letter by coming naked to meet her in the garden. Shelley's friend, Mrs. Newton, allowed her children to run about the house without clothes, although she confined her personal observance of the rites to her own room. Thomas Holcroft believed that he could prolong his life by standing naked for an hour or so night and morning. Although the story is reported on the authority of Thomas Butts, Captain Butts declared that his grandfather emphatically denied it, and an unpublished letter of Samuel Palmer's suggests that it may well have been a fabrication of Blake's pupil, the recalcitrant Master Tommy. Even if it were true it would tell us nothing significant about William or Catherine Blake.

(The Lambeth period was that of Blake's greatest worldly prosperity.) Mrs. Blake tried the experiment of keeping a servant, but afterwards preferred to do the housework herself in addition to helping her husband print his books, sometimes she also helped to colour them. To these years belongs the story of a burglary, when sixty pounds' worth of plate and forty pounds' worth of clothes were stolen. Charity was possible on no mean scale. The Blakes noticed that a young man of delicate appearance passed their house daily carrying a portfolio. They made his acquaintance, and during the long illness which preceded his death visited him daily, supplying money, wine, and other necessities. The gift to a free-thinker already noticed belongs to this period.

It

It is said that Blake had at this time pupils of high rank who found their master so delightful that, the lesson ended, they often persuaded him to spend the rest of the day in their company, but that, after the misguided endeavour of friends to secure for him the post of drawing-master to the royal family, he gave up teaching as incompatible with his other work. The story of George the Third's only criticism when some of Blake's drawings were shown to him, "take them away! take them away!" bears no date.

In 1793 Blake issued a Prospectus, To the Public, dated 10th October. It opens with the statement that "the Labours of the Artist, the Poet, the Musician, have been proverbially attended by poverty and obscurity, this was never the fault of the Public, but was owing to a neglect of means to propagate such works as wholly absorbed the Man of Genius. Even Milton and Shakespeare could not publish their own works." Blake goes on to explain with a cheerful truculence that he has invented a process by which these difficulties are obviated, and that he has been able to "bring before the Public works (he is not afraid to say) of equal magnitude and consequence with the productions of any age or country." Then follows a list containing eight illuminated books and two Historical Engravings, "Job" and "Edward and Elinor." The Prospectus ends with the following intimation: "No Subscriptions for the numerous great Works now in hand are asked, for none are wanted, but the Author will produce his works, and offer them to sale at a fair price." The prices of the books vary from 10s 6d to 3s. The most expensive item is the engraving of Job—"What is Man that thou should try him every Moment," priced at 12s. It is of special interest as the first presentation of a story which was to be the subject of Blake's greatest series of engravings. The most beautiful figure is that of Job's wife, whose face and attitude are expressive of deep emotion. The companion print, Ezekiel, "I take away from thee the desire of thine eyes," which was published later in the same month is, as a whole, even more impressive. The engraving of "The Accusers of Theft, Adultery, Murder" had been published in the preceding June, but does not appear in the list. One state of this print is inscribed with a quotation from the "Prologue intended for a Dramatic Piece of King Edward the Fourth" in Blake's Poetical Sketches

When the senses
Are shaken and the soul is driven to madness

Congenial work was obtainable with less difficulty than during his latter years. In 1794 his old friend, Flaxman, came back to London after seven years in Italy. Gilchrist states that Blake engraved the plates for Flaxman's Odyssey (1793) as the original plates by Piroli had been lost, though his name remains on the title-page, but there appears to be no evidence for this assertion. Blake designed, but did not himself engrave, a frontispiece and two vignettes for a translation of Burger's Leonora, published in 1796.

In 1794 Blake printed a Small Book of Designs consisting of twenty-three relief etchings from his Illuminated Books, coloured with opaque pigment. About the same time he also issued a Large Book of Designs, among which are coloured prints of his early "Joseph of Arimathea" and of an enlarged version of "Glad Day." The only complete copies of these books known to exist are in the Print Room at the British Museum, but in each case plates apparently belonging to a second copy have survived. Both books were probably printed in the first instance for Blake's friend and admirer Ozias Humphrey, the well-known miniature painter. If this be so, Blake refers to them in his letter to Dawson Turner of 9th June 1818 as "a selection from the different Books of such as could be Printed without the Writing, tho' to the Loss of some of the best things. For they, when Printed perfect, accompany Poetical Personifications & Acts, without which Poems they never could have been Executed."

Blake's colour-printed drawings rank among his finest and most characteristic work, exhibiting an energy of inspiration akin to that of The Marriage of Heaven and Hell. Most of them were produced at Lambeth, many of them during the year 1795. The method is described by Mr Laurence Binyon in his Drawings and Engravings of William Blake:

The method was to make the design roughly and swiftly on mill-board in distemper (not oil-colours) and while it was wet take an impression impression from it on paper. The blotted ground-work of this impression was coloured up by hand. The design could be revived on the mill-board when another impression was wanted.

This magnificent series included "Satan exulting over Eve," "Elijah in the Chariot of Fire," "Newton," "Nebuchadnezzar," "The House of Death" (the "Lazar-House" of Milton), "Hecate," "Pity" from Macbeth, and "The Elohim Creating Adam."

His work had now become a subject of interest and controversy among his fellow artists. Farington notes on 19th February 1796 that "West, Cosway, and Humphrey spoke warmly of the designs of [William] Blake the Engraver, as works of extraordinary genius and imagination. Smirke differed in opinion, from what he had seen, so do I."

From Farington we hear of Blake's engagement as illustrator of Young's Night Thoughts.

June 24th (1796) Fuseli called on me last night and sat till 12 o'clock. He mentioned [William] Blake, the Engraver, whose genius and invention have been much spoken of. Fuseli has known him several years and thinks he has a good deal of invention, but that "fancy is the end and not a means in his designs." He does not employ it to give novelty and decoration to regular conceptions but the whole of his aim is to produce singular shapes and odd combinations.

Blake has undertaken to make designs to encircle the letter press of each page of "Young's Night Thoughts." Edwards, the Bookseller, of Bond Street, employs him, and has had the letter press of each page laid down on a large half sheet of paper. There are about 900 pages. Blake asked 100 guineas for the whole. Edwards said that he could not afford to give more than 20 guineas for which Blake agreed. Fuseli understands that Edwards proposes to select about 200 from the whole and to have that number engraved as decorations for a new edition.

Farington's entry on 11th January 1797 must also refer to the Night Thoughts.

Blake's eccentric designs were mentioned. Stothard (R.A.) supported his claims to genius, but allowed he had been misled to extravagances in his art, and he knew by whom. Hoppner (R.A.) ridiculed the absurdity of his designs, and said "Nothing would be more easy than to produce such. They were like the conceits of a drunken fellow or madman." Represent a Man sitting on the Moon, and (drowning) the sun out, "that would be a whim of as much merit." Stothard was angry, mistaking the laughter caused by Hoppner's description.

The complete series of designs is now in the Print Room at the British Museum. The first part only of the edition was published, appearing in the autumn of 1797, with an introductory note, probably by Fuseli. It contained plates engraved by Blake from 43 out of his 537 designs. The copy, which belonged to Thomas Butts, was richly coloured by Blake himself; the colouring of several others is feeble and probably the work of Mrs. Blake. The muse who dictated the Night Thoughts was a daughter of the eighteenth century, but Dr. Edward Young, at the age of seventy-six, caught strange premonitory glimpses of the Daughters of Inspiration, recorded in his Conjectures on Original Composition. If, as is likely enough, Blake read this little treatise, his heart must have warmed toward the author while at work on his illustrations.

The first record of Blake's acquaintance with George Cumberland, a cousin of the dramatist, is a letter of 6th December 1795, but they had probably met some years previously. The friendship lasted till the end of Blake's life, one of his letters, written in 1827, is to Cumberland, whose home was at Bristol, and Cumberland's little message card or bookplate was his last engraving. Blake gave him some instruction in engraving, and assistance in his Thoughts on Outline, published in 1796. This work exalts "the inestimable value of chaste outline" and explains its importance in ancient art. Of the 24 designs of classical subjects drawn by Cumberland 8 were engraved by Blake. He acknowledged Cumberland's gift of the book with the exhortation

Go on Go on Such works as yours, Nature & Providence, the Eternal Parents, demand from their children how few produce them in such perfection how Nature smiles on them how Providence rewards them How all your Brethren say, "the sound of his harp & his flute heard from his secret forest cheers ^{pro} the labours of life, & we plow & reap forgetting our labour"

Cumberland was concerned in the movement for founding the National Gallery, and Blake, who had not yet suffered his reaction against Greek art, partly from his rejection of Greek philosophy and partly on account of its supposed subservience to mechanical canons, was enthusiastic about the project

After

After the completion of the designs for Young's Night Thoughts Cumberland introduced Blake as a possible illustrator to the Rev John Trusler, author of Hogarth Moralized and The Way to be Rich and Respectable and many other works, but, as these titles suggest, the association was not a fruitful one

I attempted every morning for a fortnight together [writes Blake] to follow your Dictate, but when I found my attempts were in vain, resolved to show an independence which I know will please an Author better than slavishly following the track of another, however admirable that track may be At any rate, my Excuse must be I could not do otherwise, it was out of my power!

But Dr Trusler was not pleased he wanted straightforward illustrations which should be immediately intelligible to himself and his readers Blake replies to his objections

I really am sorry that you are fall'n out with the Spiritual World, Especially if I should have to answer for it I feel very sorry that your Ideas & Mine on Moral Painting differ so much as to have made you angry with my method of study If I am wrong, I am wrong in good company I had hoped your plan comprehended All Species of this Art, & Especially that you would not regret that Species which gives Existence to Every other, namely, Visions of Eternity You say that I want somebody to Elucidate my Ideas But you ought to know that What is Grand is necessarily obscure to Weak men That which can be made Explicit to the Idiot is not worth my care The wisest of the Ancients consider'd what is not too Explicit as the fittest for Instruction, because it rouses the faculties to act I name Moses, Solomon, Esop, Homer, Plato

I have therefore proved your Reasoning Ill proportion'd, which you can never prove my figures to be, they are those of Michael Angelo, Rafael & the Antique, & of the best living Models I perceive that your Eye is perverted by Caricature Prints, which ought not to abound so much as they do Fun I love, but too much Fun is of all things most loathsom Mirth is better than Fun, & Happiness is better than Mirth I feel that a Man may be happy in This World And I know that This World is a World of Imagination & Vision I see Everything I paint in This World, but Every body does not see alike To the Eyes of a Miser a Guinea is far more beautiful than the Sun, & a bag worn with the use of Money has more beautiful proportions than a Vine filled with Grapes The tree which moves some to tears of joy is in the Eyes of others only a Green thing which stands in the way Some see Nature all Ridicule & Deformity, & by these I shall not regulate my proportions, & some scarce see Nature at all But to the Eyes of the Man of Imagination, Nature is Imagination itself As a man is, so he sees As the Eye is formed, such are its

Powers

Powers You certainly Mistake, when you say that the Visions of Fancy are not to be found in This World To Me This World is all One continued Vision of Fancy or Imagination, & I feel Flatter'd when I am told so What is it sets Homer, Virgil & Milton in so high a rank of Art? Why is the Bible more Entertaining & Instructive than any other book? Is it not because they are addressed to the Imagination, which is Spiritual Sensation, & but mediately to the Understanding or Reason? Such is True Painting, and such was alone valued by the Greeks & the best modern Artists Consider what Lord Bacon says "Sense sends over to Imagination before Reason have judged, & Reason sends over to Imagination before the Decree can be acted" See Advancement of Learning, part 2, p 47 of first Edition

But I am happy to find a Great Majority of Fellow Mortals who can Elucidate My Visions, & Particularly they have been Elucidated by Children, who have taken a greater delight in contemplating my Pictures than I even hoped Neither Youth nor Childhood is Folly or Incapacity Some Children are Fools & so are some Old Men But There is a vast Majority on the side of Imagination or Spiritual Sensation

The letter from which this quotation is taken, an illuminating document to students of Blake, perplexed the worthy doctor, who endorsed it "Blake, dim'd with Superstition"

Blake's comments in thanking Cumberland for the recommendation to Trusler, despite its failure, close the incident.

I have made him a Drawing in my best manner, he has sent it back with a Letter full of Criticisms, in which he says It accords not with his Intentions, which are to Reject all Fancy from his Work How far he Expects to please, I cannot tell But as I cannot paint Dirty rags & old shoes when I ought to place Naked Beauty or simple ornament, I despair of Ever pleasing one Class of Men Unfortunately our authors of books are among this Class, how soon we shall have a change for the better I cannot Prophecy Dr Trusler says "Your Fancy, from what I have seen of it, & I have seen variety at Mr Cumberland's, seems to be in the other world, or the World of Spirits, which accords not with my Intentions, which, whilst living in This World, Wish to follow the Nature of it" I could not help smiling at the difference between the doctrines of Dr Trusler & those of Christ But, however, for his own sake I am sorry that a Man should be so enamour'd of Rowlandson's caricatures as to call them copies from life & manners, or Fit things for a Clergyman to write upon

The cold reception of the Night Thoughts served as a check on Blake's employment as illustrator and engraver, but he fortunately became acquainted with an enthusiastic and self-effacing patron who allowed him to follow his own own bent. In the letter to Cumberland about the Trusler affair Blake continues

As to Myself, about whom you are so kindly Interested, I live by Miracle I am Painting small Pictures from the Bible For as to Engraving, in which art I cannot reproach myself with any neglect, yet I am laid by in a corner as if I did not Exist, & since my Young's Night Thoughts have been publish'd, Even Johnson & Fuseli have discarded my Graver But as I know that he who Works & has his health cannot starve, I laugh at Fortune & Go on & on I think I foresee better Things than I have ever seen My Work pleases my employer, and I have an order for Fifty small pictures at one Guinea each, which is something better than mere copying after another artist But above all, I feel happy & contented let what will come, having passed now near twenty years in ups & downs, I am used to them, & perhaps a little practise in them may turn out to benefit It is now Exactly Twenty years since I was upon the ocean of business, & tho' [I] laugh at Fortune, I am perswaded that She Alone is the Governor of Worldly Riches, & when it is Fit she will call upon me, till then I wait with Patience, in hopes that She is busied among my Friends

The "employer" referred to was Thomas Butts, Muster Master General, who filled his house in Fitzroy Square with Blake's work for many years he was a constant purchaser, sometimes taking a drawing a week In posterity's debt to him must be reckoned not only the large number of Blake's paintings and drawings which might not have existed without his discerning encouragement, but letters from Blake to him, invaluable as autobiography A letter of his, quoted in a later chapter, shows the kindly jovial nature of the man He came of a distinguished family, one of his ancestors being Sir William Butts, physician to Henry VIII and a patron of Holbein Blake was engaged at a salary of twenty-six pounds per annum to teach drawing to Thomas Butts, junior, but there is a family tradition that the father profited more than the son from these lessons Some relics of them still survive, a copper plate with a classical figure playing a harp, the fragment of another plate, and two sheets of drawings copied by Tommy from Blake's originals In the centre of one of these is a grasshopper, probably the same which later captivated the children of John Linnell A charming needlework picture of two rabbits by Mrs Butts suggests that she too may have benefited by Blake's designs There was a close friendship between the two families families, and frequent visits were exchanged. The youthful Tommy records, in a pocket diary of 13th May 1800, that "Mr and Mrs Blake and Mr T Jones drank tea with Mama." And again on 13th September "Mr Blake breakfasted with Mama." On 14th August 1809 he writes to his mother "This morning I breakfasted with George before I went to South Molton Street, you wished me to do so while you and my Father are out of Town. Mr and Mrs Blake are very well, they say I am browner and taller;—they intend shortly to pay the promised visit at Epsom."

Blake's friendship with the elder Butts lasted till the end of his life. He mentions a call from Butts in 1827. Thomas Butts, junior, does not appear to have appreciated either Blake or his works. He parted with a large number of these after his father's death, including the original "Inventions to the Book of Job," leaving the remainder to his son, Captain Butts, and his daughter, Mrs Graham Foster Piggott. Mrs Piggott stored her share in a loft, where it is supposed that they were devoured by rats. Captain Butts, on the other hand, appreciated Blake's work as his grandfather had done. He only sold two or three examples during his lifetime, but his widow was obliged to part with the collection in 1903.

While living at Lambeth Blake amused himself by illustrating Gray's Poems. The book was presented by him to Mrs Flaxman with a dedicatory verse implying his gratitude for her husband's kind offices with Hayley which resulted in the move to Felpham. He had shown himself a reader of Gray as early as 1785, when he exhibited at the Royal Academy "The Bard, from Gray," of which he wrote later in the Descriptive Catalogue. And his "Fly," in the Songs of Experience, is reminiscent of Gray's "Poor Moralist! and what art thou? A solitary fly." These drawings show that Blake was attracted by Gray's imagery and humour. Many of them are roughly executed and seem grotesque accompaniments to the polished verse. Those illustrating "A Long Story" and the "Ode on the Death of a Favourite Cat" are, as a whole, the most successful, and are more humorous than any of Blake's other work. The alternations of his sympathy between the cat

cat and the fish, or their "spiritual forms," are entertaining and characteristic. Such were the occupations of the artist during the Lambeth years, years which were fruitful also for the poet and the mystic.

The Visions of the Daughters of Albion (1793) is the first of the minor symbolic books, usually described as the Lambeth Books, although it may have been engraved before Blake left Poland Street.

(Thel had personified the human soul gazing fearfully through the door of imagination upon the World of Generation, the Visions are concerned with her struggles when she has entered that world. Oothoon, instinct in its natural purity, is torn between Bromion, conventional religion, and morality, and Theotormon, desire restrained by reason and clouded by jealousy. Oothoon, although she has been prostituted by Bromion, implores Theotormon to believe that she is still innocent and pure.)

"Silent I hover all the night, and all day could be silent
If Theotormon once would turn his loved eyes upon me
How can I be defil'd when I reflect thy image pure?
Sweetest the fruit that the worm feeds on, & the soul prey'd on by woe,
The new-wash'd Lamb ting'd with the village smoke, & the bright swan
By the red earth of our immortal river I bathe my wings,
And I am white and pure to hover round Theotormon's breast."

Then Theotormon broke his silence, and he answer'd

"Tell me what is the night or day to one o'erflowed with woe?
Tell me what is a thought, & of what substance is it made?
Tell me what is a joy, & in what gardens do joys grow?
And in what rivers swim the sorrows? And upon what mountains Wave shadows of discontent? And in what houses dwell the wretched, Drunken with woe forgotten, and shut up from cold despair?"

Tell me where dwell the thoughts, forgotten till thou call them forth?

Tell me where dwell the joys of old? & where the ancient loves,
And when will they renew again, & the night of oblivion past,
That I might traverse times and spaces far remote, and bring Comforts into a present sorrow and a night of pain?
Where goest thou, O thought? to what remote land is thy flight?
If thou returnest to the present moment of affliction

Wilt thou bring comforts on thy wings, and dews and honey and balm, Or poison from the desert wilds, from the eyes of the envier?"

She perceives that Urizen, the restrainer, Blake's God of reason, who appears for the first time in this poem, is the author of Bromion's "one law for both the lion and the ox"

"O Urizen! Creator of men! mistaken Demon of heaven!

Thy joys are tears, thy labour vain to form men to thine image
How can one joy absorb another? are not different joys Holy, eternal, infinite? and each joy is a Love

Blake's belief in the innocence of instinct and his passionate denunciation of the evils of repression in this poem have scandalized the "angels." As in some of his drawings for Vala he has used sex symbolism in such a way that they were partly obliterated while in Linnell's possession, so here his words are audaciously innocent. The poem presents a twofold drama, that of the human soul in the world of experience and that of the mythological personages who exhibit her adventures. Critics vary in their emphasis on one or the other element. It must rest with the taste and judgment, and with the sense of humour of the reader to determine whether the "girls of mild silver, or of furious gold," whom Oothoon proposes to catch and trap, symbolize joys and instincts which should not be mutually exclusive, or whether Blake is advocating that a woman should generously supply her lover with a blonde and a brunette, and recline cheerfully on a bank watching the results. Yet Blake unmistakably refers to the social problem for which Mary Wollstonecraft was seeking a solution both personally and in her courageous book, when he writes of the tragedy of enforced chastity, and the misery of loveless marriage.

Till she who burns with youth, and knows no fixed lot, is bound
In spells of law to one she loathes? And must she drag the chain Of life in weary lust? Must chilling, murderous thoughts obscure
The clear heaven of her eternal spring, to bear the wintry rage
Of a harsh terror, driv'n to madness, bound to hold a rod Over her shrinking shoulders all the day, & all the night
To turn the wheel of false desire

This poem, as a whole, is the most powerful and moving of the symbolic books, and it is not obscure if the main symbolism be once grasped. Oothoon exhibits the twofold tragedy tragedy of the spiritual conflict of the soul, and of the woman—or of the man—who comes in conflict with the social laws which do not recognize that “One law for the Lion & Ox is Oppression.” The answer to her questionings and lamentations is to be found in the words from the Vision of the Last Judgment already quoted in this world only spiritual freedom is possible. The individual, Milton or “William Bond,” for whom some may read William Blake, must work out his own problems with the aid of love inspired by imagination.

Unorganiz'd Innocence An Impossibility

Innocence dwells with Wisdom, but never with Ignorance

America (1793), the first book with “Lambeth” on the title-page, is in subject the third of the series in which Los, who is both Time and the Poetic Spirit, plays upon his four harps, the four continents. The Preludium tells in allegory how the spirit of Man must be freed by revolt. Orc, the terrible adolescent, breaks his chains and embraces nature, the Virgin, the Shadowy Daughter of Urthona, dumb and unfruitful till dominated by him. Then she put aside her clouds & smil'd her first-born smile,

As when a black cloud shews its lightnings to the silent deep,
And spoke:

I know thee, I have found thee, & I will not let thee go Thou art the image of God who dwells in darkness of Africa,
And thou art fall'n to give me life in regions of dark death

Then follows “A Prophecy,” or symbolic poem, describing the American Revolution. Washington, supported by Franklin, Paine, and the others, protests against the tyranny of England. the spirit of Revolt is born

And in the red clouds rose a Wonder o'er the Atlantic sea, Intense! naked! a Human fire, fierce glouring, as the wedge
Of iron heated in the furnace his terrible limbs were fire
With myriads of cloudy terrors, banners dark & towers Surrounded heat but not light went thro' the murky atmosphere

Orc proclaims the resurrection of Man's saviour, liberty.

“The morning comes, the night decays, the watchmen leave their stations,
The grave is burst, the spices shed, the linen wrapped up,
The bones of death, the cov'ring clay, the sinews shrunk & dry'd Reviving

Reviving shake, inspiring move, breathing, awakening, Spring like redeem'd captives when their bonds & bars are burst
 Let the slave grinding at the mill run out into the field
 Let him look up into the heavens & laugh in the bright air,
 Let the chained soul, shut up in darkness and in sighing,
 Whose face has never seen a smile in thirty weary years,
 Rise and look out, his chains are loose, his dungeon doors are open,
 And let his wife and children return from the oppressor's scourge
 They look behind at every step & believe it is a dream, Singing 'The Sun has left his blackness & has found a fresher morning,

And the fair Moon rejoices in the clear & cloudless night,
 For Empire is no more, and now the Lion & Wolf shall cease ' "

The Angel of Albion challenges him thus

"Blasphemous Demon, Antichrist, hater of Dignities, Lover of wild rebellion, and transgressor of God's Law,
 Why dost thou come to Angel's eyes in this terrific form?"
 The Terror answer'd "I am Orc, wreath'd round the accursed tree

The times are ended, shadows pass, the morning 'gins to break,
 The fiery joy, that Urizen perverted to ten commands,
 What night he led the starry hosts thro' the wide wilderness,
 That stony law I stamp to dust, and scatter religion abroad
 To the four winds as a torn book, & none shall gather the leaves,
 But they shall rot on desert sands, & consume in bottomless deeps,
 To make the deserts blossom, & the deeps shrink to their fountains,
 And to renew the fiery joy, and burst the stony roof,
 That pale religious lechery, seeking Virginity,
 May find it in a harlot, and in coarse-clad honesty
 The undefil'd, tho' ravish'd in her cradle night and morn,
 For everything that lives is holy, life delights in life,
 Because the soul of sweet delight can never be defil'd Fires unwrap the earthly globe, yet man is not consum'd, Amidst the lustful fires he walks, his feet become like brass,
 His knees and thighs like silver, & his breast and head like gold "

England threatens war, the representatives of the States, consult together, and Boston's Angel speaks out

He cried "Why trembles honesty, and, like a murderer Why seeks he refuge from the frowns of his immortal station?
 Must the generous tremble & leave his joy to the idle, to the pestilence

That mock him? Who commanded this? what God? what Angel?
 To keep the gen'rous from experience till the ungenerous
 Are unrestrain'd performers of the energies of nature,
 Till pity is become a trade, and generosity a science
 That men get rich by, & the sandy desert is giv'n to the strong?
 What God is he writes laws of peace and clothes him in a tempest?

What

What pitying Angel lusts for tears, and fans himself with sighs?
 What crawling villain preaches abstinence & wraps himself
 In fat of lambs? no more I follow, no more obedience pay!"

England tries to crush the spirit of liberty, but finds in dismay that it is awakening even on her own shores Urizen, the Restrainer, is alarmed and prevents the "Demon's Light" from reaching Europe in its full intensity for twelve years, the period between the American and French Revolutions, but Stuff shudderings shook the heav'nly thrones! France, Spain, &

 Italy

In terror view'd the bands of Albion, and the ancient Guardians, Fainting upon the elements, smitten with their own plagues
 They slow advance to shut the five gates of their law-built heaven, Filled with blasting fancies and with mildews of despair,
 With fierce disease and lust, unable to stem the fires of Orc
 But the five gates were consum'd, & their bolts and hinges melted, And the fierce flames burnt round the heavens, and round the abodes of men

The spirit of man has conquered

Europe (1794) is introduced in two copies only by the Fairy's Song, which has been already quoted The Pre-ludium continues the Preludium of America Nature is worn out with travail, and fears what she may bring forth But with her "shady woe" is mingled "visionary joy "

"And who shall bind the infinite with an eternal band
 To compass it with swaddling bands? and who shall cherish it With milk and honey?
 I see it smile, & I roll inward, & my voice is past "

She ceast, & roll'd her shady clouds
 Into the secret place

Then follows another Prophecy, or symbolic poem
 The first verse is in imitation of Milton's "Hymn to the Nativity"

The deep of winter came,
 What time the secret child
 Descended thro' the orient gates of the eternal day War ceas'd, & all the troops like shadows fled to their abodes

Los, the Spirit of Poetry, rejoices, and tries to conquer by his songs Urizen, Reason, who is usurping the North, the region of the spirit, instead of being content to rule the South

South, his own domain of intellect But Los is not at one with his wife, Enitharmon, Inspiration and Spiritual Beauty She, in her division from Los, sets up false ideals from which repression and hypocrisy result She sends forth her sons, Rintrah, Wrath, and Palamabron, Pity, saying “Go! tell the Human race that Woman’s love is Sin,

That an Eternal life awaits the worms of sixty winters,
In an allegorical abode where existence hath never come Forbid all Joy, & from her childhood shall the little female Spread nets in every secret path ”

Enitharmon thus renders impossible the spiritual freedom which should have followed from the birth of Christ, and then she, Inspiration, slumbers for 1,800 years

Meanwhile Urizen, who had already set up the false religion of the Druids,

Then was the serpent temple form’d, image of infinite,
Shut up in finite revolutions, and man became an Angel, Heaven a mighty circle turning, God a tyrant crown’d—is lord of man’s spirit The Stone of Night, the Decalogue, is surrounded by trees of blackest leaf, superstition, and overhung by poisonous deadly nightshade, and Urizen unclasps “ his brazen Book That Kings & Priests had copied on Earth,” the book of charity uninformed by imagination, sympathy, and forgiveness England is already threatened by Revolution Justice has become timid and hypocritical Palamabron and Rintrah, Pity and Wrath, are under the sway of Enitharmon, instead of being as they should on the side of liberty Then

Enitharmon laugh’d in her sleep to see (O woman’s triumph!)
Every house a den, every man bound the shadows are fill’d
With spectres, and the windows wove over with curses of iron, Over the doors “Thou shalt not”, & over the chimneys “Fear” is written

With bands of iron round their necks fasten’d into the walls
The citizens, in leaden gyves the inhabitants of suburbs
Walk heavy, soft and bent are the bones of villagers

The Angel of Albion, surrounded by the clouds of Urizen and the flames of Orc, is powerless, and “A mighty Spirit leap’d from the land of Albion, Nam’d Newton,” the spirit of materialism His coming rouses Inspiration,
but

but she persists in her false ideals "Till morning oped the eastern gates", with the light comes the Spirit of Revolution

But terrible Orc, when he beheld the morning in the east, Shot from the heights of Enitharmon,
 And in the vineyards of red France appear'd the light of his fury
 The Sun glow'd fiery red!
 The furious terrors flew around
 On golden chariots, raging with red wheels dropping with blood!
 The Lions lash their wrathful tails!
 The Tygers couch upon the prey & such the ruddy tide,
 And Enitharmon groans & cries in anguish and dismay Then Los arose his head he rear'd in snaky thunders clad,
 And with a cry that shook all nature to the utmost pole, Call'd all his sons to the strife of blood

The frontispiece of Europe showing Urizen as the Creator is one of Blake's most magnificent designs. The first sketch appears in the MS Book, page 96, with the legend "Who shall bind the Infinite?" and on his death-bed he laid aside the print of "The Ancient of Days Striking the First Circle of the Earth," which he had coloured for Tatham, with the words "There, I have done all I can! It is the best I have ever finished. I hope Mr Tatham will like it." The subject of the design is taken from Proverbs ix, 27, "when he set a compass upon the face of the depth" and from the Book of Urizen, vii, 7, 8

He form'd a line & a plummet
 To divide the Abyss beneath,
 He form'd a dividing rule,
 He formed scales to weigh,
 He formed massy weights,
 He formed a brazen quadrant,
 He formed golden compasses,
 And began to explore the Abyss

J T Smith tells how "He was inspired with the splendid grandeur of this figure, by the vision which he declared hovered over his head at the top of his staircase, and he has been frequently heard to say that it made a more powerful impression upon his mind than all he had ever been visited by. This subject was such a favourite with him, that he always bestowed more time and enjoyed greater pleasure when colouring the print, than anything he ever produced."

In

In the Palgrave copy of Europe in the British Museum poetical quotations are written under some of the illustrations. They are not in Blake's handwriting, and may have been inserted by the first owner of the book on his own initiative, but it is possible that they were suggested to him by Blake as explaining the pictures. The majority of the quotations are from Bysshe's Art of Poetry, which Blake possessed.

The First Book of Urizen (1794) develops one of Blake's most important metaphysical doctrines. Tom Paine had said that the Bible described a devil under the name of God. Blake was equally heretical. "Thinking as I do that the Creator of this World is a very Cruel Being, and being a Worshipper of Christ, I cannot help saying 'the Son, O how unlike the Father! First God Almighty comes with a Thump on the Head, and then Jesus Christ comes with a balm to heal it'."

Urizen is Blake's version of the Jehovah of the Bible. The rational principle usurps the power which should belong to the spiritual, and creates the world by division and constraint. The tyranny of Reason leaves no room for freedom, which is of the spirit.

The description of the creation and passages in A Vision of the Last Judgment suggest that Blake was acquainted with the doctrine of the Timaeus, at any rate as expounded by Thomas Taylor. But whereas Plato's God is represented as justified in making the most satisfactory copy of himself possible in time as the proper outlet for his energy, Urizen, the usurper, makes a false start, and, unlike the God of the Timaeus or of the Bible, he is displeased with the results. His creations are not good in his eyes, because his power over them is limited. Los, Poetry, Imagination, has entered the world of generation with him, and therefore this world has still a passage to eternity. By his struggle with Urizen, he made the creation an act of mercy. Imagination defines error in order that it can be cast out then and only then is spiritual freedom possible.

The Preludium announces the power of the "Primeval Priest," Urizen, over the North, spirit, and so explains the first verse of the poem

Lo, a Shadow of horror is risen

In Eternity' unknown, unprolific,
 Self-clos'd, all-repelling what Demon
 Hath form'd this abominable void
 This soul-shudd'ring vacuum? Some said
 "It is Urizen " But unknown, abstracted, Brooding, secret, the dark Power is hid

Urizen,

An activity unknown and horrible,
 A self-contemplating shadow, proceeds by division and measurement Separating himself from the Eternal he tries to make everything conform to his own notions

"I have sought for a joy without pain, For a solid without fluctuation " and imposes his own wisdom

"Here alone I, in books form'd of metals,
 Have written the secrets of wisdom,
 The secrets of dark contemplation,
 By fightings and conflicts dire
 With terrible monsters Sin-bred
 Which the bosoms of all inhabit,
 Seven deadly Sins of the soul

Lo! I unfold my darkness, and on This rock place, with strong hand, the Book
 Of eternal brass, written in my solitude

Laws of peace, of love, of unity,
 Of pity, compassion, forgiveness,
 Let each chuse one habitation,
 His ancient infinite mansion,
 One command, one joy, one desire,
 One curse, one weight, one measure,
 One King, one God, one Law "

Urizen and the world of his creation are cut off

And Los, round the dark globe of Urizen, Kept watch for Eternals to confine
 The obscure separation alone,
 For Eternity stood wide apart,
 As the stars are apart from the earth

Urizen has become a "formless, unmeasurable death," convulsed by awful changes in a dreamless night But Los gave form to the changes of Urizen, so that he, who had been one of the Eternals, became Man, and God of this world

All the myriads of Eternity,
 All the wisdom & joy of life
 Roll like a sea around him,
 Except what his little orbs
 Of sight by degrees unfold

And now his eternal life
 Like a dream, was obliterated

Then Los himself, imprisoned with Urizen in the created world, "suffered his fires to decay" In his anguish he is divided from Enitharmon, Inspiration, who, in her separation from him, becomes Pity, "the first Female," the "Divided Image of Man" The separation of the sexes, though, as Blake's fairy knew, it opens a door into eternity, seems to remove the World of Generation still further

"Spread a Tent with strong curtains around them Let cords & stakes bind in the void,
 That Eternals may no more behold them "

Los pursues Enitharmon and begets a child Orc, the spirit of Revolt and Freedom But with the division of sex, jealousy has come into being, and Orc is chained to the Rock, the Decalogue, "beneath Urizen's deathful Shadow" But though bound his very existence is a sign of hope

The dead heard the voice of the child
 And began to awake from sleep,
 All things heard the voice of the child
 And began to awake to life

And Urizen, craving with hunger, Stung with the odours of Nature,
 Explor'd his dens around

Then follow the lines already quoted, which are illustrated by the frontispiece of Europe Los prevents Enitharmon, Pity, from seeing Urizen and Orc So Urizen continues his work alone and creates the four elements, but the world he had made is hateful to him

Till a Web, dark & cold, throughout all The tormented element stretch'd
 From the sorrows of Urizen's soul
 And the Web is a Female in embryo None could break the Web, no wings of fire,
 So twisted the cords, & so knotted
 The meshes, twisted like to the human brain

And all call'd it the Net of Religion

Restrained

Restrained by the Net of Urizen the senses are weakened and driven inward, and the giant forms of Urizen's children contract into mortal men

Six days they shrunk up from existence,
And on the seventh day they rested,
And they bless'd the seventh day, in sick hope,
And forgot their Eternal life

* * * *

No more could they rise at will
In the infinite void, but bound down
To earth by their narrowing perceptions
They lived a period of years,
Then left a noisom body
To the jaws of devouring darkness

And their children wept, & built Tombs in the desolate places,
And form'd laws of prudence, and call'd them
The eternal laws of God

So civilization began with Materialism, the thirty cities of Egypt, "Whose Gods are the Powers Of this World, Goddess Nature, Who first spoil & then destroy Imaginative Art, For their Glory is War and Dominion " Those sons of Urizen who had refused to be restrained by the Net tried to deliver their shrunken brethren, but, finding persuasion vain, they quitted the "pendulous earth," now englobed by the ocean of space and time

A lyric from the Rossetti MS, written about this time, suggests that escape from the "Net" is still possible for man

O Lapwing, thou fliest around the heath, Nor seest the net that is spread beneath
Why dost thou not fly among the corn fields?
They cannot spread nets where a harvest yields

The Book of Los (1795) retells the story from the standpoint of Los The first five stanzas take the place of the Preludium of the earlier books Eno, the Earth Mother, laments eternity where spiritual excess was unrestrained, whereas now the shrunken sublimities appear as vices in the created world

"O Times remote!
When Love & Joy were adoration,
And none impure were deem'd
Not Eyeless Covet,

Nor

Nor Thin-hpp'd Envy, Nor Bristled Wrath,
 Nor Curled Wantonness,

But Covet was poured full,
 Envy fed with fat of lambs,
 Wrath with lion's gore,
 Wantonness lull'd to sleep
 With the virgin's lute,
 Or sated with her love,

Till Covet broke his locks & bars
 And slept with open doors,
 Envy sung at the rich man's feast,
 Wrath was follow'd up and down
 By a little ewe lamb,
 And Wantonness on his own true love Begot a giant race "

The story begins in the sixth stanza Los finds himself cut off from eternity, bound in a chain,

 Compell'd to watch Urizen's shadow, amid the black darkness of the material world He breaks loose from restraint, but, having as yet no means of combating the new and terrible conditions, he only falls into error

Falling! falling! Los fell & fell,
 Sunk precipitant, heavy, down, down,
 Times on times, night on night, day on day——
 Truth has bounds, Error none—falling, falling,
 Years on years, and ages on ages
 Still he fell thro' the void, still a void
 Found for falling, day & night without end

But gradually thought succeeds the first impotent wrath as of a new-born babe

Then aloft his head rear'd in the Abyss,
 And his downward-borne fall chang'd oblique

* * * *

Incessant the falling Mind labour'd, Organizing itself, till the Vacuum
 Became element, phiant to rise
 Or to fall, or to swim or to fly,
 With ease searching the dire vacuity

Los gives himself form and struggles to separate the "thin" from the "heavy," the spiritual from the material
"Then

"Then Light first began," and he sees the "Backbone of Urizen" Imagination is now a power in the Material World Los can bind Urizen and forge the sun of poetry He tries to chain Urizen to this sun, but it is only temporal, the poetry of this world, a "glowing illusion," whose light Urizen quenches Yet even so his contact with imagination gives him form and life, till he becomes the earthly man till a Form

Was completed, a Human Illusion
In darkness and deep clouds involv'd

Such is Blake's version of the creation of Adam God has become Man, and so the poem ends without word of the birth of Orc, the spirit of freedom, by whom man shall be saved

The Book of Urizen was entitled by Blake The First Book of Urizen, and Blake must have originally intended that the Book of Ahania (1795), which continues the story, should be the second book Fuzon, Passion, one of the sons of Urizen who had refused to be restrained by the net of religion, revolts against his father he hurls a beam of flame against Urizen, who is protected only by a shield forged in the mills of logic The beam penetrates the shield, "the cold loins of Urizen dividing" Reason, who, unable to synthesize the contraries, had desired "joy without pain," wounded by passion, casts out his "parted soul," Ahania, Pleasure Pleasure, repressed and separated from reason, is "Mother of Pestilence" because, as is written in the Proverbs of Hell "He who desires but acts not, breeds pestilence" Fuzon's beam is identified by Blake with the pillar of fire which led the Israelites out of bondage, and, after it had been seized by Los, the Spirit of Time and Poetry, with Christ, the Deliverer Fuzon, not realizing that Urizen, one of the immortals, cannot die, thinks that he has killed his father, and has become God in his stead But Urizen slays the serpent of lust, who attacked him when he repressed Pleasure as Sin, and forming a bow of the serpent's ribs, shoots the poisoned Rock of the Decalogue at Fuzon The body of Fuzon, still alive though he seems to be dead, is crucified by Urizen on the Tree of Mystery, Religion The "pale living Corse" of Fuzon is assailed by
the

the arrows of Pestilence, and Shapes, the spectres of repressed desires, flutter round the Tree of Mystery In the Book of Urizen civilization began with Africa, Materialized Reason now Asia rises, Materialized Passion The lament of Ahania, Pleasure cast out by Reason, with which the poem closes, is one of the most beautiful passages in the Lambeth Books

The Song of Los (1795), which comprises "Africa" and "Asia," precedes "America" and "Europe" in subject, although written later In "Africa" Adam, the natural man, and Noah, the man of imagination, are described as watching Urizen setting up his different forms of religion They are diversely affected "Adam shudder'd! Noah faded!" These religions are "Abstract," because the process takes place which had been described in The Marriage of Heaven and Hell

The ancient Poets animated all sensible objects with Gods or Genuses, calling them by the names and adorning them with the properties of woods, rivers, mountains, lakes, cities, nations, and whatever their enlarged and numerous senses could perceive

And particularly they studied the genius of each city & country, placing it under its mental deity,

Till a system was formed, which some took advantage of, & enslav'd the vulgar by attempting to realize or abstract the mental deities from their objects thus began Priesthood,

Choosing forms of worship from poetic tales

And at length they pronounc'd that the Gods had order'd such things

Thus men forgot that All deities reside in the human breast

The symbol shrinks to dogma and so becomes the Philosophy of Brahma, the Religion of the Jews, and the Aestheticism of the Greeks Orc, the spirit of freedom, is in chains, but Oothoon (Instinct as in the Visions of the Daughters of Albion) can still speak

And Jesus heard her voice (a man of sorrows) he receiv'd
A Gospel from wretched Theotormon

This Gospel withered into monkish Christianity, and Mahommedanism and the "Code of War" of Northern Mythology signalize the reaction against asceticism

Har and Heva, Poetry and Painting, who should have announced the Gospel of Imagination, shrank

Into two narrow doleful forms,

Creeping

Creeping in reptile flesh upon
 The bosom of the ground,
 And all the vast of Nature shrunk
 Before their shrunken eyes

So the sons of Har, men, who are all possessors of the Poetic Genius in varying degrees, were by their laws and religions, bound more and more closely to earth

Till a Philosophy of Five Senses was complete Urizen wept & gave it into the hands of Newton & Locke

The Kings of Asia, startled in their religious darkness by the approach of revolution in Europe, call for still more restraint The appeal of these orthodox believers to the God of reason is Blake's ironical exposition of the social aims and conditions of his day

"Shall not the King call for Famine from the heath, Nor the Priest for Pestilence from the fen,
 To restrain, to dismay, to thin
 The inhabitants of mountain and plain,
 In the day of full-feeding prosperity
 And the night of delicious songs?

Shall not the Councillor throw his curb
 Of Poverty on the laborious,
 To fix the price of labour,
 To invent allegoric riches?¹

And the privy admonishers of men
 Call for fires in the City,
 For heaps of smoking ruins
 In the night of prosperity & wantonness?

To turn man from his path,
 To restrain the child from the womb,
 To cut off the bread from the city,
 That the remnant may learn to obey,

That the pride of the heart may fail,
 That the lust of the eyes may be quench'd,
 That the delicate ear in its infancy
 May be dull'd, and the nostrils clos'd up,
 To teach mortal worms the path
 That leads from the gates of the Grave?"

¹ Blake's allusion to fixing the price of labour obviously refers to the Spitalfields weavers, whose wages were fixed by the magistrates at this time Their wages became allegoric because, as a result, the trade tended to leave Spitalfields

But Urizen's books of brass, iron, and gold (charity, war, and economics) are melted by the fires of Orc. Revolution breaks forth that by the trial of a "Last Judgment" error may be cast out

The last three of the minor symbolic books known as the Lambeth Books were engraved in 1795, and probably about that time Blake began to write a long mystical poem, with the title of

The Death and Judgment of The Ancient Man
A Dream of Nine Nights which he afterwards altered to

THE FOUR ZOAS
The Torments of Love & Jealousy in
Of Albion the Ancient Man

A third title on the back of a drawing may also have been intended for it "The Bible of Hell, in Nocturnal Visions collected Vol I Lambeth" This appears likely, as The Four Zoas is divided into Nine Nights, a form which may have been suggested by Young's Night Thoughts, illustrated by Blake at that time. If this be so, Vala or The Four Zoas is the poem promised in The Marriage of Heaven and Hell "I have also the Bible of Hell, which the world shall have whether they will or no" But Blake never gave Vala to the world; it remained in manuscript with alternative drafts, repetitions, and additions, and was not finally revised. John Linnell received it as a gift from Blake, it is now in the Department of MSS at the British Museum, and was accurately printed for the first time by Mr Keynes. Blake obviously intended to systematize in this poem the metaphysic which he had been evolving as he wrote the Lambeth Books. Some of the myths reappear, and passages are adopted from these books either verbatim or with slight alterations. The manuscript was extensively revised from 1800 to 1803, while Blake was living at Felpham Felpham, and possibly some alterations were made at a still later date. It was apparently abandoned when he decided to complete and engrave Milton and Jerusalem, as the former contains repetitions and adaptations from it, and the latter lengthy excerpts.

The Four Zoas, who give to the poem the title which seems to have been Blake's final choice, are Urizen, Reason, Urthona, Spirit, Luvah, Passion, and Tharmas, the Body. They are associated by Blake with the Four Living Creatures of the Book of Revelation, to which there are frequent allusions. The poem describes the fall, the creation of the world in space and time, the Crucifixion and Resurrection, and consequent redemption and regeneration. The fall is due to the twofold error of the Zoas, who set themselves up as gods instead of realizing that they are but the servants of the Eternal Man, and also usurp each other's regions, with the result that they fail in the fulfilment of their own functions. Urizen, for example, who in Eternity is faith and certainty, is changed to doubt, and Urthona, spirit, suffers a threefold division into Los, Poetry ineffectual and uninspired, Enitharmon, Inspiration, Spiritual beauty, who is feeble and easily led astray in her isolated state, and the spectre of Urthona, a mere shadow of the Eternal Spiritual Wisdom which includes all knowledge and all art.

Blake had now begun to use the symbolism which pervades his later work, representing reason or logic by the Spectre, and emotion or inspiration by the Emanation. The simplest expression of his doctrine, that before harmony can be attained this fatal division must be transcended, is the lyric "Spectre and Emanation," which he wrote at Felpham.

As in the earlier books there is a twofold drama, because the history of the macrocosm is also that of the microcosm, the history of the universe writ small is that of the individual. Those for whom this situation is not already sufficiently complicated may amuse themselves by naming Los William, and Enitharmon Catherine, in order to extract autobiographical significance, deducing that Catherine was anxious that William should play a part in politics and leave her free for self-realization, and that

that William paid her a pretty compliment in referring to the way in which she coloured his illuminated books. But as the story of Los and Enitharmon is largely concerned with the birth of their son Orc and Los's jealousy of the adolescent, this procedure is necessarily perfunctory, if not wholly superfluous.

Above the title is written in Greek, the fruit of Felpham scholarship, Ephesians vi, 12 "For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in the high places."

Night the First describes the beginning of the fall. The second stanza, with a marginal reference to John xvii c, 21, 22, 23 v, and John i c, 14 v explains the Four Zoas

"Four Mighty Ones are in every Man, a Perfect Unity Cannot Exist but from the Universal Brotherhood of Eden,
The Universal Man, To Whom be Glory Evermore Amen"

Blake had laid down as principles in All Religions are One "that the Poetic Genius is the true Man," and that "as all men are alike in outward form, So (and with the same infinite variety) all are alike in the Poetic Genius." In Vala Los, the Poetic Genius, whose name in Eternity is Urthona, Spirit, is supposed to have originally dwelt in Man whole and undivided. Blake invokes his Muse to describe the Fall

Daughter of Beulah, Sing
His fall into Division & his Resurrection to Unity, His fall into the Generation of decay & death, & his Regeneration by the Resurrection from the dead

The first to feel the fall into division is Tharmas, the Body, who is no longer at one with Enion, the Earth Mother and generative instinct. He has lost his "emanation," his power of intuition, and he has become furtive and a prey to self-analysis. He infects Enion with his dread, and she hides from him, but the separation only hastens his fall into the sea of time and space. There Enion follows the spectre of Tharmas, who in his division reproaches her with sin, and of their union, now neither happy nor innocent, are born Los and Enitharmon. This birth results from the division of Urthona, Spirit, with whom in eternity they are one. Los and Enitharmon in their

their separate entities cannot maintain a state of love and unity, but lapse into shame and jealousy and quarrels. Enitharmon appeals to Urizen, who takes advantage of their dissension to proclaim himself God, and claims obedience from Los, who still retains remembrance of the Divine Image “Obey my voice, young Demon, I am God from Eternity to Eternity,

Art thou a visionary of Jesus, the soft delusion of Eternity?

Lo I am God, the terrible destroyer, & not the Saviour

Why should the Divine Vision compell the sons of Eden

To forego each his own delight, to war against his spectre?

The Spectre is the Man The rest is only delusion & fancy ”

Los becomes reconciled to Enitharmon, but they forsake Luvah and Vala (passion and nature), and their nuptial song is chanted by the hosts of Urizen, who foretell the destruction of the Eternal Man, call on the spider to spread the Net of Religion, and announce the birth of Orc, revolution. Enion, the Earth Mother, stands aloof in lamentation. The fall of the Eternal Man has now begun, and he can no longer abide in Beulah, the place of repose midway between eternity and the world of space and time, described earlier in the poem

There is from Great Eternity a mild & pleasant rest

Nam'd Beulah, a soft Moony Universe, feminine, lovely,

Pure, mild & Gentle, given in Mercy to those who sleep,

Eternally created by the Lamb of God around,

On all sides, within & without the Universal Man

The daughters of Beulah follow sleepers in all their Dreams,

Creating spaces, lest they fall into Eternal Death

The Circle of Destiny complete, they gave to it a space

And nam'd the space Ulro, & brooded over it in care & love

He must sink into the death-like sleep of the material world, where martyrdom and error await him

Now Man was come to the Palm tree & to the Oak of weeping

Which stand upon the Edge of Beulah, & he sunk down

From the supporting arms of the Eternal Saviour who dispos'd

The pale limbs of his Eternal Individuality

Upon The Rock of Ages, Watching over him with Love & Care

The first draft of Night the First ends here, and the second draft was not incorporated by Blake with the necessary readjustments, as it would doubtless have been in a final revision. In the second draft the fall is explained to the Council of God in Great Eternity by Messengers from Beulah, who bewail the plight of Albion, the Eternal Man, because Urizen, Reason, having failed to subject Los entirely to his will has proposed to Luvah, Passion, that he himself should usurp the North, the Region of Spirit, and rule Jerusalem, the emanation of Albion, who symbolizes Spiritual freedom, abandoning his own region, the South, to Passion. Luvah will not agree and Urizen threatens him with death. Urthona, Spirit, has been riven by their strife, the result of his division having been the birth of Los and Enitharmon. Jerusalem, Spiritual Freedom, is in ruins. The outcome of this embassy from Beulah is that Seven Guardians, the Seven Eyes of God, are appointed to watch over the Eternal Man.

the Seventh is named Jesus,
The Lamb of God, blessed for ever, & he follow'd the Man Who wander'd in Mount Ephraim seeking a Sepulcher,
His inward eyes closing from the Divine Vision, & all His children wandering outside, from his bosom fleeing away

Blake has deleted "Second" in the title "Vala, Night the Second," but, in the absence of further alteration or addition, it must be treated as the second book of the poem. The Eternal Man, wearied on his Couch of Death, abdicates and gives his sceptre to Urizen, who creates the Mundane Shell, the universe, as a protection against non-existence, the boundlessness of error. The world of matter, Ulro, comes into existence. "What is within now seems without." Vala, under the influence of Urizen, turns against Luvah, and Reason seems to have destroyed Passion and even Nature herself. The Material World is ordered by his sons with compasses and scales, but the Eagles of Genius bear their share in the work, though some of them are snared in the net of religion, or entrapped by false art. So Reason raises his Golden Hall, but though he does not exclude from it his emanation, Ahania, the emotion of pleasure, they are no longer one.

Two wills they had, two intellects, & not as in times of old

But the Eternal Man in the death of this life is under the guardianship of Jesus as in the Song of Los Jesus receives

the Gospel from wretched Theotormon, so here the Incarnation is necessary for the deliverance of man because Passion has been curbed by Reason

For the Divine Lamb, Even Jesus who is the Divine Vision, Permitted all, lest Man should fall into Eternal Death,
For when Luvah sunk down, himself put on the robes of blood Lest the state call'd Luvah should cease, & the Divine Vision Walked in robes of blood till he who slept should awake

Meanwhile Los and Entharmon are represented as still for a time happy and innocent—a further proof that the poem lacks final revision as the Nuptial Song of the First Night had shown another state of things. But there is no true union between them: they are soon beset by jealousy and, though Entharmon still is able to revive Los from seeming death, she exults unduly in her power. Los, pursuing Inspiration, delusive in her division from him, drives away Enon, the generative instinct, who breaks out in lamentation

What is the price of Experience? do men buy it for a Song?
Or wisdom for a dance in the street? No, it is bought with the price
Of all that a man hath, his house, his wife, his children Wisdom is sold in the desolate market where none come to buy,
And in the wither'd field where the farmer plows for bread in vain

"It is an easy thing to triumph in the summer's sun
And in the vintage & to sing on the waggon loaded with corn
It is an easy thing to talk of patience to the afflicted,
To speak the laws of prudence to the houseless wanderer,
To listen to the hungry raven's cry in wintry season
When the red blood is fill'd with wine & with the marrow of lambs

"It is an easy thing to laugh at wrathful elements,
To hear the dog howl at the wintry door, the ox in the slaughter house moan,
To see a god on every wind & a blessing on every blast,
To hear sounds of love in the thunder storm that destroys our enemies house,
To rejoice in the blight that covers his field, & the sickness that cuts off his children, While our olive & vine sing & laugh round our door, & our children bring fruits & flowers

Then the groan & the dolor are quite forgotten, & the slave grinding at the mill,
And the captive in chains, & the poor in the prison, & the soldier in the field

When

When the shatter'd bone hath laid him groaning among the happier dead

"It is an easy thing to rejoice in the tents of prosperity Thus could I sing & thus rejoice but it is not so with me "

Ahania, Pleasure, hears the lament of Enion, and, as Los had hoped, her peace is also destroyed

Night the Third opens with Ahania's attempt to relieve her perplexities by strengthening Urizen's sense of power

"Why sighs my Lord? are not the morning stars thy obedient Sons?
Do they not bow their bright heads at thy voice? at thy command
Do they not fly into their stations & return their light to thee?
The immortal atmospheres are thine, there thou art seen in glory
Surrounded by the ever-changng Daughters of the Light Why wilt thou look upon futurity, dark'ning present joy?"

But Urizen knows that Orc, the Spirit of Revolt, is born and must in his maturity rule over reason He sees Vala, Nature, as the daughter of Enitharmon, Space, and Luvah, Passion, as the son of Time Ahania reproaches him with his initial error in letting Luvah, Passion, drive "the immortal steeds of light," the horses of instruction She tells him of a vision in which she had seen the Dark'ning Man, as in the death-like sleep of this life he wandered farther and farther from the light of eternity, and heard his voice worshipping his own shadow, his desires ex-ternalized and become heaven to him

Then Man ascended mourning into the splendors of his palace, Above him rose a Shadow from his wearied intellect
Of living gold, pure, perfect, holy, in white linen pure he hover'd,
A sweet entrancing self-delusion, a wat'ry vision of Man, Soft exulting in existence, all the Man absorbing

Man fell upon his face prostrate before the wat'ry shadow Saying, "O Lord, whence is this change? thou knowest I am nothing "

But Luvah, Passion, revealed himself in the shadow, and strove for dominion over the Man, prostrating him and covering him with boils Then the Fallen Man drove away Luvah and Vala, who went forth into the world leaving jealousy and rage in the Human Heart where Paradise and its joys had abounded Urizen, in his anger at Ahania's vision which confirms his own fears, casts her out, and she falls into Non-Entity In the terror and confusion

confusion caused by her fall Tharmas, the Body, is materialized He repudiates Enion, the Generative instinct She becomes "only a voice eternal wailing in the Elements", and then Tharmas knows that "Love and Hope are ended"

Night the Fourth opens with the lament of Tharmas for the loss of Enion He denounces Reason and Passion—"The all powerful curse of an honest man be upon Urizen & Luvah"

He calls on Los to rebuild the universe as he directs, but Los refuses, saying that Urizen is God, and since he is now fallen into the Deep, he himself is God Los boasts that he is all powerful, and Urthona, Spirit, but his shadow Tharmas carries off Enitharmon, Inspiration, and without his emanation Los is reduced to the Spectre of Urthona the Poetic Genius has lost his intuition and retains only his logical faculty The Spectre appeals to Tharmas, who restores Enitharmon, and he becomes Los once more Then Tharmas sees himself as God, but he would rather be a Man, and he again desires Los to do his work for him Los, as in The Book of Urizen, binds and limits reason

Meanwhile the Council of God is watching over the Body of the Eternal Man, and the daughters of Beulah are comforted by the Divine Vision

"Lord Saviour, if thou hadst been here our brother had not died,
And now we know that whatsoever thou wilt ask of God
He will give it thee, for we are weak women & dare not lift
Our eyes to the Divine pavilions, therefore in mercy thou Appearest cloth'd in Luvah's garments that we may behold thee
And live Behold Eternal Death is in Beulah Behold
We perish & shall not be found unless thou grant a place
In which we may be hidden under the shadow of wings
For if we, who are but for a time & who pass away in winter, Behold these wonders of Eternity, we shall consume"

* * * *

The Saviour mild & gentle bent over the corse of Death, Saying, "If ye will Believe, your brother shall rise again"
And first he found the Limit of Opacity, & nam'd it Satan,
In Albion's bosom, for in every human bosom these limits stand
And next he found the Limit of Contraction, & nam'd it Adam, While yet these beings were not born nor knew of good or Evil

And

Limit

Was put to Eternal Death

Satan,

Satan, Error, must be limited that he may be cast out error is opaque because impenetrable by the light of truth contraction must also be limited that return from the finite to the infinite and eternal may not be impossible But Los himself was changed by his labours

he became what he beheld
 He became what he was doing he was himself transform'd

Night the Fifth shows the changed Los dancing in mad triumph on the mountains, until he and Enitharmon shrink and wither on the Rocky Cliff of the material world They are no longer responsive to beauty as in their age of innocence, but "Their senses unexpansive in one steadfast bulk remain " Then, as Urizen had foretold, Orc, the Spirit of Revolt, is born, and is acclaimed as a lower form of Luvah, Passion "Luvah, King of Love, thou art the King of rage & death " Luvah himself does not recognize his incarnation, and assails him with the weapons of reason Los is aghast, but Enitharmon nourishes her child When Orc reaches the age of adolescence Los becomes jealous of his love for his mother and binds him with a chain But his vitality is unquenchable fettered though he be, his very existence transforms the world

His limbs bound down mock at his chains, for over them a flame
 Of circling fire unceasing plays, to feed them with life & bring
 The virtues of the Eternal worlds, ten thousand thousand spirits
 Of life lament around the Demon, going forth & returning
 At his enormous call they flee into the heavens of heavens
 And back return with wine & food, or dive into the deeps
 To bring the thrilling joys of sense to quell his ceaseless rage
 His eyes, the lights of his large soul, contract or else expand Contracted they behold the secrets of the infinite mountains,
 The veins of gold & silver & the hidden things of Vala,
 Whatever grows from its pure bud or breathes a fragrant soul Expanded they behold the terrors of the Sun & Moon,
 The Elemental Planets & the orbs of Eccentric fire
 His nostrils breathe a fiery flame, his locks are like the forests
 Of wild beasts, there the lion glares, the tiger & wolf howl there,
 And there the Eagle hides her young in cliffs & precipices
 His bosom is like starry heaven expanded, all the stars Sing round, there waves the harvests & the vintages rejoice, the springs

Flow into rivers of delight, there the spontaneous flowers Drink, laugh & sing, the grasshopper, the Emmet and the Fly,

The

The Golden Moth builds there a house & spreads her silken bed
 His loins inwove with silken fires are like a furnace fierce
 As the strong Bull in summer time when bees sing round the heath
 Where the herds low after the shadow & after the water spring,
 The num'rous flocks cover the mountains & shine along the valley
 His knees are rocks of adamant & rubie & emerald Spirits of strength in Palaces rejoice in golden armour Armed with spear & shield they drink & rejoice over the slain Such is the Demon, such his terror on the nether deep

Los and Entharmon repent, but fail to undo their work and set Orc free, because the chain of jealousy is now so deeply rooted in the foundations of the world that it cannot be torn up. This book ends with the recantation of Urizen, who realizes, though only for the moment, that his degradation is the result of his own pride and misuse of his powers. He had refused the services which were asked of him for the guidance of the Eternal Man; the power of Spirit was weakened, and Passion and Nature had withered up under his rule, but his repentance brings him hope.

In Night the Sixth Urizen sets forth on his travels through the material world, and meets his three daughters, who symbolize the loins, heart, and head. They shrink and hide in material forms when they recognize their father, and he curses them because Tharmas, the body, is their God. Tharmas attempts to confront Urizen, but flies from him in terror, praying for death because he can create only monstrous forms. Urizen pursues his way to his own region, the south, aghast at the horror and misery and degradation he beholds on all sides.

He knew they were his Children run'd in his ruin'd world

Then he visits the East, vacant because Luvah no longer rules there, and falls into the void. But "The ever pitying one who seeth all things" allows his life to be renewed, and, bearing his books of brass and iron and gold, he goes on his way, and tries to reorganize the world that it may obey his will, dragging the net of religion behind him. Next he falls into the West, the region of Tharmas, who fled in pursuit of Enion, and from terror of Urizen. Urthona alone of the four Zoas remains in his own region, the North, but only in his divided, spectral form. Urizen attempts attempts to invade the North, but he is repelled by the Spectre of Urthona, aided by Tharmas, and four Sons of Urizen, the four elements. Defeated by Spirit, Reason withdraws into the net of religion.

There are two versions of Night the Seventh, of which that marked (a) is probably the later. As Reason could not prevail over Spirit, even in its darkened form, so Spirit in its division cannot wholly conquer Reason. Urizen, no longer pursued by the Spectre of Urthona, goes to the South, his own region, where Orc, Revolt, lies bound. Orc, despite his fetters, is vital and inspired, and both Urizen and Los are filled with envy. While Reason sits brooding coldly over Revolt, the root of Mystery sends up branches into the heaven of Los, the Poet, and Urizen himself escapes with difficulty and pain, leaving his iron book of war for safety in its shade. He offers Orc his pity and advice, but Orc, who is both genius and revolutionist, replies by jeers—"my fierce fires are better than thy snows." Urizen commands his daughters to knead the bread of sorrow, materialism, for Orc, and reads from the book of brass his Gospel of charity.

"Listen, O Daughters, to my voice. Listen to the Words of Wisdom, So shall (you) govern over all, let Moral Duty tune your tongue
But be your hearts harder than the nether millstone
To bring the Shadow of Enitharmon beneath our wondrous tree,
That Los may Evaporate like smoke & be no more,
Draw down Enitharmon to the Spectre of Urthona,
And let him have dominion over Los, the terrible Shade Compell the poor to live upon a Crust of bread, by soft mild arts Smile when they frown, frown when they smile, & when a man looks pale

With labour & abstinence, say he looks healthy & happy,
And when his children sicken, let them die, there are enough
Born, even too many, & our Earth will be overrun Without these arts. If you would make the poor live with temper [ance]

With pomp give every crust of bread you give, with gracious cunning Magnify small gifts, reduce the man to want a gift, & then give with pomp

Say he smiles if you hear him sigh. If pale, say he is ruddy Preach temperance say he is overgorg'd & drowns his wit
In strong drink, tho' you know that bread & water are all
He can afford. Flatter his wife, pity his children, till we can Reduce all to our will, as spaniels are taught with art."

Orc

Orc curses the hypocrisy of Urizen who at last recognizes Luvah, Passion, in him, but Orc himself now finds his escape in hypocrisy and becomes the serpent. Next follows a difficult and subtle passage in which the divided spirit communes with itself, the psychological states changing as they speak—these are Los and Enitharmon, Poetry and Inspiration, their shadows, the logical form of poetry devoid of intuition and suppressed inspiration, and the Spectre of Urthona, Spirit, in its logical form Enitharmon, Spiritual Beauty, brings forth Vala, the Shadowy Female, Material Beauty, thus giving complete fulfilment to the prophecy of Urizen. Spirit in division enacts the drama of the fall in its Biblical version with Orc, the serpent, in the part of tempter. Los would have united with Enitharmon and the spectre of Urthona, but inspiration flies for refuge to the tree of Mystery, the tree of the knowledge of Good and Evil. She has already eaten of the fruit.

"It was by that I knew that I had Sinn'd, & then I knew That without a ransom I could not be sav'd from Eternal death" and persuades Los to eat also. The knowledge of Good and Evil fills the poet with despair, but spiritual logic comforts him with the hope of the eventual reunion of spirit, and he has a vision of the Lamb of God, the Redeemer. But Enitharmon, convinced of sin, can only behold the Lamb as Avenger, "nor will the Son of God redeem us, but destroy." Los, who better understood the meaning of the Vision and knew that redemption would come through sacrifice of self, persuades Enitharmon to help him in building Golgonooza, the City of Art, which he had already begun under the inspiration of the Divine Mercy. Art brought comfort to the Spirit of Revolt and reconciled Poetry with his enemy, Reason.

The alternative version also continues the story from the Sixth Night, but in so different a form that Blake can scarcely have intended to combine them. The details are less finished, and it does not therefore fall into place so readily as version (a), though it contains passages of great force and beauty. Urizen returns to his own region and determines that as God he will shape the world to his own ends.

First Trades & Commerce, ships & armed vessels he builded laborious

To swim the deep, & on the land, children are sold to trades
Of dire necessity, still laboring day & night till all Their life extinct they took the spectre form in dark despair,
And slaves in myriads, in ship loads, burden the hoare sounding deep,

Rattling with clanking chains, the Universal Empire groans

He institutes the worship of Chastity, and since chastity is sex repressed, sex itself is worshipped disguised or in secret Strife and Religious hypocrisy are rampant Revolt, loving nature and jealous of her subjection, breaks loose from his fetters, but in the violence of his triumph he misdirects the forces of spirit, already darkened, and defeats himself

They sound the clarion strong, they chain the howling captives,
They give the Oath of blood, they cast the lots into the helmet,
They vote the death of Luvah & they nail'd him to the tree,
They pierc'd with a spear & laid him in a sepulcher
To die a death of Six thousand years, bound round with desolation
The sun was black & the moon roll'd, a useless globe, thro' heaven

After this Urizen rules unmolested, hence the increasing conflict and complexity of life which culminates in the industrial revolution, the mockery of nature

Then left the sons of Urizen the plow & harrow, the loom,
The hammer & the chisel & the rule & compasses
They forg'd the sword, the chariot of war, the battle ax,
The trumpet fitted to the battle & the flute of summer,
And all the arts of life they chang'd into the arts of death
The hour glass condemn'd because its simple workmanship
Was as the workmanship of the plowman, & the water wheel
That raises water into Cisterns, broken & burn'd in fire Because its workmanship was like the workmanship of the shepherd,
And in their stead intricate Wheels invented, wheel without wheel,
To perplex youth in their outgoings & to bind to labours
Of day & night the myriads of Eternity, that they might file
And polish brass & iron hour after hour, laborious workmanship, Kept ignorant of the use that they might spend the days of wisdom
In sorrowful drudgery to obtain a scanty pittance of bread,
In ignorance to view a small portion & think that All,
And call it demonstration, blind to all the simple rules of life

Nature herself, perverted, revels in the conflict, and "No more remain'd of Orc but the Serpent round the tree of Mystery "

But Tharmas, the body, retains his innocence in the midst of despair

“Oh Vala, once I liv'd in a garden of delight,
I waken'd Enion in the morning, & she turned away
Among the apple trees, & all the garden of delight Swam like a dream before my eyes I went to seek the steps
Of Enion in the gardens, & the shadows compass'd me
And clos'd me in a wat'ry world of woe when Enion stood Trembling before me like a shadow, like a mist, like air
And she is gone, & here alone I war with darkness & death
I hear thy voice, but not thy form see, thou & all delight
And life appear & vanish, mocking me with shadows of false hope Hast thou forgot that the air listens thro' all its districts, telling The subtlest thoughts shut up from light in chambers of the Moon?”

Nature repentant, laments that passion is hidden from her in “that Outrageous form of Orc ”

The body blames nature, but she, Material Beauty, though her face is shadowy, is the true daughter of Spiritual Beauty, and her forms have life which opens within to eternity Her range is as wide as that of reason moreover there is no gulf fixed between her and the land of Beulah, which lies midway between the material world and eternity

The daughters of Beulah, “Waiting with patience for the fulfilment of the Promise Divine,” see undoubting the errors of the World, which must be seen to be cast out

These they nam'd Satans, & in the Aggregate they nam'd them Satan

Night the Eighth again proves the lack of revision by the repetition of some incidents which have been already described The Council of God, in their unity as Jesus, meets over the Fallen Man, who is guarded by Beulah as two angels, one at his head and one at his feet He begins to awake, and the Divine Vision is beheld again by Los and Enitharmon They help to waken the Man by clothing with form “the poor wondering spectres” who have been tempted to leave Beulah and enter the material world

Astonished, comforted, Delighted, in notes of Rapturous Ecstasy
All Beulah stood astonish'd, looking down to Eternal Death
They saw the Saviour beyond the Pit of death & destruction,

For

For whether they look'd upward they saw the Divine Vision, Or whether they look'd downward still they saw the Divine Vision

Surrounding them on all sides beyond sin & death & hell

Urizen is perplexed and terrified, because he sees that the Saviour is an incarnation of Luvah, and yet Luvah is also present in his own world in the degraded form of Orc, the serpent, still feeding on the bread of materialism. He declares war on Los and Enitharmon, but, although he did not intend it, Doubt arises, "A Shadowy hermaprodite, black & opake" Reason becomes "Himself tangled in his own net, in sorrow, lust, repentance" Meanwhile Enitharmon gives universal form to the emanation which has been lacking to the spectres, Jerusalem, Spiritual Freedom, who conceives the Lamb of God

Then sang the sons of Eden round the Lamb of God, & said
"Glory, Glory, Glory to the holy Lamb of God Who now beginneth to put off the dark Satanic body
Now we behold redemption Now we know that life Eternal Depends alone upon the Universal hand, & not in us
Is aught but death In individual weakness, sorrow & pain

* * * *

"We now behold the Ends of Beulah, & we now behold
Where death Eternal is put off Eternally Assume the dark Satanic body in the Virgin's womb, O Lamb Divine! it cannot thee annoy O pitying one,
Thy pity is from the foundation of the World, & thy Redemption Begun Already in Eternity Come then, O Lamb of God, Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly"

The Lamb of God is brought to trial by Reason.

As it is written, he was number'd among the transgressors

* * * *

Thus was the Lamb of God condemn'd to Death
They nail'd him upon the tree of Mystery, weeping over him
And then mocking & then worshipping, calling him Lord & King

Los takes the Body from the Cross and buries it in a sepulchre which he had hewn for his own burial from the rock of Eternity, Jerusalem weeping the while. But the death of the Lamb has revealed the falsity of the religion of Mystery, which condemns individuals instead of the one thing beyond redemption, error, "The State nam'd

nam'd Satan " Passion passing through revolt, which had not been capable of self-sacrifice, had sunk into this state as the serpent of hypocrisy, but now error is defined by the death of Jesus, who had sacrificed himself Reason has lost his power, and has become half repentant, half stupefied Body and Spirit, weakened and depressed by the shadow of materialism, gives allegiance to Poetry and Inspiration, though these are suffering from the general stupor

Thus in a living death the nameless shadow all things bound
 All mortal things made permanent that they may be put off
 Time after time by the Divine Lamb who died for all,
 And all in him died, & he put off all mortality

The Night ends with the lamentation of Ahania, Pleasure, who had not yet beheld the Divine Vision, and the reply of Enion, who foresees the time when she herself, as the Generative instinct, shall be "as a thing forgotten," when the mortal passes into immortality She tells of what has happened in the World of Generation

"Listen I will tell thee what is done in the caverns of the grave
 The Lamb of God has rent the Veil of Mystery, soon to return
 In Clouds & Fires around the rock & the Mysterious tree
 And as the seed waits Eagerly watching for its flower & fruit, Anxious its little soul looks out into the clear expanse
 To see if hungry winds are abroad with their invisible array,
 So Man looks out in tree & herb & fish & bird & beast Collecting up the scatter'd portions of his immortal body
 Into the Elemental forms of every thing that grows
 He tries the sullen north wind, riding on its angry furrows,
 The sultry south when the sun rises, & the angry east
 When the sun sets, when the clouds harden & the cattle stand Drooping & the birds hide in their silent nests, he stores his thoughts

As in a store house in his memory, he regulates the forms
 Of all beneath & all above, & in the gentle West Reposes where the Sun's heat dwells, he rises to the Sun
 And to the Planets of the Night, & to the stars that gild
 The Zodiac, & the stars that sullen stand to north & south,
 He touches the remotest pole, & in the center weeps
 That Man should Labour & sorrow, & learn & forget, & return To the dark valley whence he came, to begin his labour anew
 In pain he sighs, in pain he labours in his universe, Sorrowing in birds over the deep, & howling in the wolf
 Over the slain, & moaning in the cattle, & in the winds,
 And weeping over Orc, & Urizen in clouds & flaming fires,

And

And in the cries of birth & in the groans of death his voice
Is heard throughout the Universe, wherever a grass grows
Or a leaf buds, The Eternal Man is seen, is heard, is felt
And all his sorrows, till he reassumes his ancient bliss "

But "Jerusalem wept over the Sepulcher two thousand years " The religion of Mystery continues to prevail till "Satan divided against Satan", error is not cast out but a new error replaces the old

The Ashes of Mystery began to animate, they call'd it Deism
And Natural Religion, as of old, so now anew began Babylon again in Infamy, call'd Natural Religion

In "Night the Ninth Being The Last Judgment" error is realized and cast out Los and Enitharmon build up Jerusalem, Spiritual Freedom, but, not knowing that Jesus has risen from the dead and is with them in spirit, they still weep over the sepulchre and over the crucified body In his agony of grief Los destroys the material world, and then

The heavens are shaken & the Earth remov'd from its place,
The foundations of the Eternal hills discover'd
The thrones of Kings are shaken, they have lost their robes & crowns
The poor smite their oppressors, they awake up to the harvest,
The naked warriors rush together down to the sea shore Trembling before the multitude of slaves set at liberty
They are become like wintry flocks, like forests strip'd of leaves
The oppressed pursue like the wind, there is no room for escape

The summons has sounded for the Last Judgment The universe is consumed in the purifying "flames of mental fire," and the Man, now awakened from the sleep that is life in the world of space and time, remembers his happiness in Eternity, contrasting it with the present misery He challenges Urizen

The Eternal Man sat on the Rock and cried with awful voice
"O Prince of Light, where art thou? I behold thee not as once
In those Eternal fields, in clouds of morning stepping forth
With harps & songs when bright Ahania sang before thy face
And all thy sons & daughters gather'd round my ample table
See you not all this wracking furious confusion?
Come forth from slumbers of thy cold abstraction! Come forth, Arise to Eternal births! Shake off thy cold repose, Schoolmaster of souls, great opposer of change, arise!
That the Eternal worlds may see thy face in peace & joy,
That thou, dread form of Certainty, maist sit in town & village

While

While little children play around thy feet in gentle awe, Fearing thy frown, loving thy smile, O Urizen, Prince of Light "

But Reason does not answer, and the Man, who knows that the Zoas must be his servants, threatens that he shall be cast out from Eternity unless he repents, because the error of reason is more insidious and deadly than that of passion

"My anger against thee is greater than against this Luvah,
For war is energy Enslav'd, but thy religion,
The first author of this war & the destruction of honest minds
Into confused perturbation & strife & horror & pride,
Is a deceit so detestable that I will cast thee out
If thou repentest not, & leave thee as a rotten branch to be burn'd
With Mystery the Harlot & with Satan for Ever & Ever Error can never be redeemed in all Eternity,
But Sin, Even Rahab, is redeem'd in blood & fury & jealousy—That line of blood that stretch'd across the windows of the morning—
Redeem'd from Error's power Wake, thou dragon of the deeps!"

Then Urizen repents and renounces his mistaken rule over the other Zoas Immediately his youth is renewed, and Ahania, his Emanation, joins him, but she dies from excess of joy the time for Pleasure is not yet After Urizen has confessed his error the universe is convulsed in the pangs of new birth The Zoas, now acknowledging themselves the servants of Man, take on again their eternal forms and carry on joyfully the work of regeneration, symbolized as sowing, reaping, threshing, and grinding corn for the Bread, and treading the grapes for the Wine They know that "the Eternal Man is Risen," though the Human harvest cannot share their joy until the Last Judgment is over, until there is neither chaff in the bread of knowledge, nor lees in the wine of ecstasy But at last the night of Time is past

The Sun has left his blackness & has found a fresher morning,
And the mild moon rejoices in the clear & cloudless night,
And Man walks forth from the midst of the fires the evil is all consum'd
His eyes behold the Angelic spheres arising night & day,
The stars consum'd like a lamp blown out, & in their stead, behold
The Expanding Eyes of Man behold the depths of wondrous worlds!
One Earth, one sea beneath, nor Erring Globes wander, but Stars
Of fire rise up nightly from the Ocean, & one Sun

Each

Each morning, like a New born Man, issues with songs & joy Calling the Plowman to his labour & the Shepherd to his rest
 He walks upon the Eternal Mountains, raising his heavenly voice Conversing with Animal forms of wisdom night & day,
 That, risen from the Sea of fire, renew'd walk o'er the Earth,
 For Tharmas brought his flocks upon the hills, & in the Vales Around the Eternal Man's bright tent, the little children play
 Among the wooly flocks The hammer of Urthona sounds
 In the deep caves beneath, his limbs renew'd his Lions roar Around the Furnaces & in Evening sport upon the plains
 They raise their faces from the Earth, conversing with the Man

"How is it we have walk'd thro' fires & yet are not consum'd?
 How is it that all things are chang'd, even as in ancient times?"

The Sun arises from his dewy bed, & the fresh airs
 Play in his smiling beams giving the seeds of life to grow, And the fresh Earth beams forth ten thousand thousand springs of life

Urthona is arisen in his strength, no longer now Divided from Enitharmon, no longer the Spectre Los Where is the Spectre of Prophecy? where is the delusive Phantom?
 Departed & Urthona rises from the ruinous Walls
 In all his ancient strength to form the golden armour of Science
 For intellectual War The war of swords departed now,
 The dark Religions are departed & sweet Science reigns!

The myth is intricate, the symbolism remote, the allusions to and reminiscences of the Bible, Plato, Milton, as obscure as they are abundant. Obscurer still and often unfathomable are Blake's own associations with places and people whom he introduces. A summary can be but a handful of gleanings, nor can the gleaner pretend to have chosen these impersonally and with a perfect discretion. Vala will only yield its harvest to the reader who is diligent as well as receptive. Some critics appear to have expected the crisp drama of a morality play, and have in their disappointment transferred their own confusion of mind to Blake. It is essential to realize that Blake is making an attempt, impossible or absurd though it may be deemed, to describe experience, universal and individual, in its process and particularity, its psychological advances and retrogressions, without what he held to be the delusive and meretricious aid of logical dialectic, categories, and formulae. The student will often doubt his own intelligence, but his faith in Blake's will increase.

The manuscript of Vala was given to Linnell by Blake toward

toward the close of his life it contains some of his most beautiful drawings

It will have been seen that Blake's tale of work during the Lambeth period is almost incredible. During these seven years he had been employed by the booksellers, though to a less extent after the commercial failure of the Night Thoughts, he had issued independently the series of printed drawings, and had produced the Lambeth books with their numerous designs and ornaments. Moreover, he had created in them and in Vala a new and complex mythology, the product not only of intellectual effort, but of intense personal experience and emotional conflict. The self-assertion of the Prospectus and other of his references to his own work masks the essential fear and trembling of which he spoke to the young Palmer, and is of the nature of a reaction and a reassurance. A sentence in the Rossetti MS suggests that moments of superhuman energy were followed by desperate physical exhaustion. "I say I shan't live five years, And if I live one it will be a Wonder, June 1793."

He allowed himself no relaxation and yet he loved laughter. Laughter is perhaps what his life most lacked. He needed more sympathy and a little more ease. He did not need to ride in Sir Joshua's coach with pictured panels but above all more laughter. His letter to Cumberland of 2nd July 1800 shows signs of mental fatigue, and also a dread of isolating himself in his absorption. "I begin to Emerge from a deep pit of Melancholy, Melancholy without any real reason for it, a Disease which God keep you from & all good men. I have been too little among friends, which I fear they will not Excuse & I know not how to apologize for."

And again "I feel very strongly that I neglect my Duty to my Friends, but It is not want of Gratitude or Friendship but perhaps an Excess of both."

Blake the man might well need change of scene, human sympathy and relief from anxiety about the means of existence, and a deus ex machina was even then descending, beneficent in intention, if somewhat obsolete in pattern. But the marriage bells of Heaven and Hell, announcing revolution revolution to the sound of laughter, had now ceased to ring Blake's particular friend, the Angel so easily converted into a Devil, and the light-hearted Fairy of the Introduction to Europe, had failed him Their places had been taken by those vehement and inhuman abstractions Urizen, Los, and the rest, even Orc, the Secret Child, was not yet identified with that other child whose birth was the symbol of regeneration and of peace Blake the mystic had passed into the Dark Night of the Soul which, illumined now and then by dreams of dawn, would still last for some years

FELPHAM

*And all this Vegetable World appeared on my left Foot
As a bright sandal form'd immortal of precious stones & gold
I stooped down & bound it on to walk forward thro' Eternity*

HAYLEY is indeed a true poet, he has the fire and the invention of Dryden, without any of his absurdity, and he has the wit and ease of Prior. If his versification is a degree less polished than Pope's, it is more various. We find the numbers sweet and flowing, and I think sufficiently abundant in the graces of harmony.

So spake the Swan of Lichfield of the Bard of Sussex, Anna Seward of William Hayley, who was to be Blake's employer and constant companion for three years. Lest the curiosity of a too hopeful reader be aroused by Miss Seward's praise it must be added that Hayley's laurels are withered irrevocably: no critic will ever freshen them up and make them sappy with his praise. The last word is with Lord Byron, "For ever feeble and for ever tame." But Hayley took his vocation seriously enough: in the monumental memoirs of himself and his son, for which he received a substantial annuity during the last twelve years of his life, on condition that they were to be left ready for publication at his death, he is always the Poet, the Bard, the Hermit. He vented all his feeble thoughts and facile emotions in verse, priding himself on ease and rapidity of composition. His opinions on History, Painting, Sculpture, Music, and Epic Poetry were expressed in Poetic Epistles, his sepulchral tribute to the dead was paid in a hundred or more epitaphs, he was accustomed to compose on his pillow brief nocturnal poems, and was even known to emit before breakfast four devotional stanzas. His most popular poem, The Triumphs of Temper, was undertaken because "his observation of the various effects of spleen on the female character induced him to believe that he might render an important service to social life, if his poetry could induce his young and fair readers to cultivate the gentle qualities of the heart

acter of the engraving would harmonize a little more, than it does at present, with the following verses towards the conclusion of poem, which as you are a kind-hearted brother of Parnassus, you will forgive my inserting in this letter to explain my meaning to you "That youth of fairest promise, fair as May,

Pensively tender, and benignly gay,
On the Medallion still retains a form
In health exulting, and with pleasure warm,
Teach thou my hand with mutual love, to trace
His mind, as perfectly as thy lines his face!"

Blake writes again, 6th May, after the boy's death

I am very sorry for your immense loss, which is a repetition of what all feel in this valley of misery and happiness mixed I send the shadow of the departed angel, and hope the likeness is improved The lips I have again lessened as you advise, and done a good many other softenings to the whole I know that our deceased friends are more really with us than when they were apparent to our mortal part Thirteen years ago I lost a brother, and with his spirit I converse daily and hourly in the spirit, and see him in my remembrance, in the regions of my imagination I hear his advice, and even now write from his dictate Forgive me for expressing to you my enthusiasm, which I wish all to partake of, since it is to me a source of immortal joy, even in this world By it I am the companion of angels May you continue to be so more and more, and to be more and more persuaded that every mortal loss is an immortal gain The ruins of Time build mansions in Eternity

Hayley continued to dislike the portrait, but acknowledged Blake's sympathy by the gift of Alphonso's copy of The Triumphs of Temper with this characteristic inscription

Accept, my gentle visionary, Blake,
Whose thoughts are fanciful and kindly mild,
Accept and fondly keep for friendship's sake,
This favour'd vision, my poetic child!

Rich in more grace than fancy ever won,
To thy most tender mind this book will be,
For it belong'd to my departed son,
So from an angel it descends to thee

W H July, 1800

But he was not yet content with the portrait of Tom, and Blake paid a visit to Felpham in order to make a further attempt under his supervision On 16th July he writes to Flaxman

As

As I find our good enthusiastic Friend Blake will (in his Zeal to render the Portraits of our beloved scholar more worthy of Him) extend the time of his Residence in the south a little longer than we at first proposed I shall not wait to transmit my Thanks to you for a Letter of infinite kindness by the worthy Engraver on his Return

After a reference to his plans for the mother of the lamented Thomas Alphonso, "I hope she will pass a respected & tranquill evening of mortal existence in a neat and comfortable little mansion near the Grave of that justly idolized youth " he continues

The good Blake is taking great pains to render all the Justice in his power to Romney's exquisite portrait of Him, & I hope the two next prints will atone for all the defects of the engraved Medallion

The end of the letter is torn, but is to the effect that "the good Blake" will give Flaxman a history of what he has "done in the South on his Return," and Hayley sends Nancy Flaxman a book which "shall travel to Her by the Favor of Blake "

Cowper had died a week earlier than Tom, and the afflicted Hayley determined to devote himself to immortalizing the memories of his friend and his son. He invited Blake to engrave the plates for his Life of Cowper, suggesting that he should live for a time at Felpham, while employed on this and other work. This proposal no doubt originated during Blake's visit. Hayley himself had just moved from the family property at Eartham to a "Marine Villa" at Felpham in order to retrench his expenses. Blake, as we have seen, was in the mood to welcome such a change. In August he went again to Felpham, and rented a cottage from the landlord of the Fox Inn for £20 a year. His gratitude to Flaxman for the introduction to Hayley which led to this arrangement was boundless, one of its expressions is to be found in the lines beginning "I bless thee, O Father of Heaven & Earth, that ever I saw Flaxman's face," a hymn of thanksgiving for his friends, earthly and heavenly, in which Hayley, the last recruit, joins Ezra and Isaiah, Shakespeare and Milton, Boehme and Paracelsus, Flaxman and Fuseli. It is well that Blake did not read Flaxman's letter of 19th August to Hayley about the migration to Felpham, or he would have accounted this corporeal friend a spiritual enemy

You may naturally suppose that I am highly pleased with the exertion of your usual Benevolence in favour of my friend Blake & as such an occasion offers you will perhaps be more satisfied in having the portraits engraved under your own eye, than at a distance, indeed I hope that Blake's residence at Felpham will be a mutual comfort to you & him, & I see no reason why he should not make as good a livelihood there as in London, if he engraves & teaches drawing, by which he may gain considerably as also by making neat drawings of different kinds but if he places any dependence on painting large pictures, for which he is not qualified either by habit or study, he will be miserably deceived

Mrs Blake also wrote to Mrs Flaxman of their plans for a summer visit from the Flaxmans " & we not only talk but behold! the Angels of our journey have inspired a song to you" then follow Blake's verses "To My Dear Friend, Mrs Anna Flaxman "

Mrs Blake was worn out by pleasurable excitement and domestic cares Blake tells Hayley on 16th September that "My dear and too careful and over-joyous woman has exhausted her strength " None the less, two days later they set out for Felpham between six and seven a m , accompanied by Miss Blake The journey lasted till 11 30 p m , involving six changes of chaise and driver for themselves and their sixteen heavy boxes and portfolios, yet "All was Chearfulness & Good Humour on the Road " The cottage, which is still standing, a six-roomed thatched cottage facing south with a verandah running the length of the house, smiled false promises in the summer weather

We are safe arrived at our Cottage, which is more beautiful than I thought it, & more convenient It is a perfect Model for Cottages &, I think, for Palaces of Magnificence, only Enlarging, not altering its proportions, & adding ornaments & not principals Nothing can be more Grand than its Simplicity & Usefulness Simple without Intricacy, it seems to be the Spontaneous Effusion of Humanity, congenial to the wants of Man No other formed House can ever please me so well, nor shall I ever be persuaded, I believe, that it can be improved either in Beauty or Use

The village seemed a haven of peace and inspiration to the travellers

Felpham is a sweet place for Study, because it is more Spiritual than London Heaven opens here on all sides her golden Gates, her windows are not obstructed by vapours, voices of Celestial inhabitants are more distinctly heard, & their forms more distinctly seen, & my Cottage is also a Shadow of their houses.

The

The omens were propitious, the implements of labour and the very words of the labourers were symbols of promise

Work will go on here with God speed —A roller & two harrows lie before my window I met a plow on my first going out at my gate the first morning after my arrival, & the Plowboy said to the Plowman, "Father, The Gate is Open "

Heaven was scarcely veiled, surely here invention would be inspired, and Execution, "the Chariot of Genius," would move with speed and ease

And Now Begins a New life, because another covering of Earth is shaken off I am more famed in Heaven for my works than I could well conceive In my Brain are studies & Chambers fill'd with books & pictures of old, which I wrote & painted in ages of Eternity before my mortal life, & those works are the delight & Study of Archangels Why, then, should I be anxious about the riches or fame of mortality? The Lord our father will do for us & with us according to his divine will for our Good

Mr Butts, whom Blake had addressed as "Dear Friend of My Angels," is delighted with his luck His letter shows the easy relations between the two households, and also his concern about Blake's heterodox opinions

Marlborough Street

DEAR SIR,

I cannot immediately determine whether or no I am dignified by the Title you have graciously conferred on me You cannot but recollect the difficulties that have unceasingly arisen to prevent my discerning clearly whether your Angels are black, white, or grey, and that on the whole I have rather inclined to the former opinion and considered you more immediately under the protection of the black-guard, however, at any rate I should thank you for an introduction to his Highness's Court, that, when refused admittance into other Mansions, I may not be received as a Stranger in this

I am well pleased with your pleasures, feeling no small interest in Your Happiness, and it cannot fail to be highly gratifying to me and my affectionate Partner to know that a Corner of your Mansion of Peace is asylumed to Her, and when invalided & rendered unfit for service who shall say she may not be quarter'd on your Cot—but for the present she is for active Duty and satisfied with requesting that if there is a Snug Berth unoccupied in any Chamber of your warm Heart, that her Portrait may be suspended there, at the same time well aware that you, like me, prefer the Original to the Copy

Your good Wife will permit, & I hope may benefit from, the Embraces of Neptune, but she will presently distinguish betwixt the warmth warmth of his Embraces & yours, & court the former with caution I suppose you do not admit of a third in that concern, or I would offer her mine even at this distance Allow me before I draw a Veil over this interesting Subject to lament the frailty of the fairest Sex for who alas! of us, my good Friend, could have thought that so good a Woman would ever have exchanged Hercules Buildings for Neptune's Bed—

So Virtuous a Woman would ever have fled from Hercules Buildings to Neptune's Bed?

Whether you will be a better Painter or a better Poet from your change of ways & means I know not, but this I predict, that you will be a better Man—excuse me, as you have been accustomed from friendship to do, but certain opinions imbibed from reading, nourish'd by indulgence, and rivetted by a confined Conversation, and which have been equally prejudicial to your Interest & Happiness, will now, I trust, disperse as a Day-break Vapour, and you will henceforth become a Member of that Community of which you are at present, in the opinion of the Archbishop of Canterbury, but a Sign to mark the residence of dim incredulity, haggard suspicion, & bloated philosophy—whatever can be effected by sterling sense, by opinions which harmonize society and beautify creation, will in future be exemplified in you, & the time I trust is not distant, and that because I truly regard you, when you will be a more valorous Champion of Revelation & Humiliation than any of those who now wield the Sword of the Spirit, with your natural & acquired Powers nothing is wanting but a proper direction of them, & altho' the way is both straight & narrow I know you too well to fear your want of resolution to persevere & to pursue it—you have the Plough & the Harrow in full view & the Gate you have been prophetically told is Open, can you then hesitate joyfully to enter into it?

I have much to congratulate you on Meat cheap, Music for nothing, a command of the Sea, and brotherly affection fluttering around ye—The Arts have promised to be propitious and the Graces will courtesy to your wishes—

Happy, happy, happy Pair,
On Earth, in Sea, or eke in Air,
In morn, at noon, and thro' the Night
From Visions fair receiving light, Long may ye live, your Guardians' Care,
And when ye die may not a Hair
Fall to the lot of Demons black,
Be singed by Fire, or heard to crack,
But may your faithful Spirit upward bear
Your gentle Souls to Him whose care
Is ever sure and ever nigh
Those who on Providence rely,
And in his Paradise above
Where all is Beauty, Truth & Love,
O May ye be allowed to chuse

For

For your firm Friend a Heaven-born Muse,
 From purest Fountains sip delight,
 Be cloathed in Glory burning bright,
 For ever blest, for ever free,
 The loveliest Blossoms on Life's Tree

I have no more Nonsense for you just now, but must assure you that I shall always sincerely devote myself to your service when my humble endeavours may be useful

Mrs Butts greets your Wife & charming Sister with a holy kiss and I, with old Neptune, bestow my Embraces there also—for yourself I commend you to the protection of your Guard & am,

Dear Sir,

Yours most cordially & faithfully

Blake exchanges for "your very beautiful & encouraging Verses" "a return of verses, such as Felpham produces by me, tho' not such as she produces by her Eldest Son" No, indeed, poor Hayley! They are the lines beginning

To my Friend Butts I write
 My first Vision of Light,
 On the yellow sands sitting

But Blake was too happy for irony Hayley was still a poet and a brother

One of Blake's first tasks was to decorate Hayley's new library at Felpham with eighteen heads nearly life size, among them Shakespeare, Homer, Camoens, Cowper with his favourite dog, Thomas Alphonso Hayley encircled by doves, Ercilla, Ariosto, and Spenser These paintings are now in the possession of the Manchester Corporation Art Gallery He also illustrated, and printed with Mrs Blake's help, Hayley's ballad, Little Tom the Sailor, which was sold for the benefit of a Folkestone widow whose son had been drowned For a time things went gaily enough Blake was even a little suspicious of his unwonted high spirits

Time flies very fast and very merrily I sometimes try to be miserable that I may do more work, but find it is a foolish experiment Happinesses have wings and wheels, miseries are leaden legged, and their whole employment is to clip the wings and to take off the wheels of our chariots We determine, therefore, to be happy and do all that we can, tho' not all that we would satisfied with the memory picture—"for I have now discovered that without Nature before the painter's Eye, he can never produce any thing in the walks of Natural Painting" For a time at least miniature painting was a pleasant change from engraving, and he had numerous sitters from the neighbourhood, but as Hayley made progress with his Life of Cowper Blake's time was mainly occupied in engraving the illustrations, printing them in his own excellent press, which had cost forty pounds. He was delighted with Cowper's letters, "Perhaps, or rather Certainly, the very best letters that were ever published" Did not the delightful letter recording a dream, in which Milton appeared "very gravely, but very neatly attired in the fashion of his day" and they talked about Paradise Lost, bring the first suggestion of Blake's symbolic book of Milton? It is not recorded whether he shared that enthusiasm for the "Yardley Oak" which moved Hayley to send for "a large lump" of the roots to be made into "nice little boxes, for the toilette of the fair"

His sympathy with Cowper is shown by a later note

Cowper came to me and said "O that I were insane always I will never rest Can you not make me truly insane" I will never rest till I am so O that in the bosom of God I was hid You retain health and yet are as mad as any of us all—over us all—mad as a refuge from unbelief—from Bacon, Newton, and Locke

Cowper's cousin, the Rev John Johnson, who had been with him during his last illness, paid a visit to Felpham that he might give Hayley some help with the Life of Cowper. Blake describes him as "a happy Abstract, known by all his Friends as the Most innocent forgetter of his own Interests" He painted a miniature of Johnson, and panels for his chimney-piece at Yaxham Rectory of "Winter," "Evening," and "Olney Bridge"

Blake rejoiced in the negotiations which led to the Peace of Amiens, and had dreams of a visit to Paris, a project which was never carried out. In a letter to Flaxman of 19th October 1801 he says

The Reign of Literature & the Arts commences Blessed are those who are found studious of Literature & Humane & polite accomplishments Such have their lamps burning and such shall shine as the stars

Now

Now I hope to see the Great Works of Art, as they are so near to Felpham Paris being scarce further off than London But I hope that France & England will henceforth be as One Country and their Arts One, & that you will ere long be erecting Monuments in Paris—Emblems of Peace

In the same letter he speaks of sending Flaxman his designs for Comus when finished Hayley had written to Flaxman the day before "it is with great delight I assure you, that our good Blake grows more & more attach'd to this pleasant marine village, & seems to gain in it a perpetual Increase of improving Talents, & settled comfort"

But the first hint of trouble had already appeared in a letter to Butts of 11th September The fussy, possessive Hayley has begun to constitute himself Blake's mentor We can hear the echo of his voice in Blake's playful self-depreciation

Time flies faster (as it seems to me) here than in London I labour incessantly & accomplish not one half of what I intend, because my Abstract folly hurries me often away while I am at work, carrying me over Mountains & Valleys, which are not Real, in a Land of Abstraction where Spectres of the Dead wander This I endeavour to prevent & with my whole might chain my feet to the world of Duty & Reality, but in vain! the faster I bind, the better is the Ballast, for I, so far from being bound down, take the world with me in my flights, and often it seems lighter than a ball of wool rolled by the wind Bacon & Newton would prescribe ways of making the world heavier to me, and Pitt would prescribe distress for a medicinal potion, but as none on Earth can give me Mental Distress, & I know that all Distress inflicted by Heaven is a Mercy, a Fig for all Corporeal! Such Distress is My mock & scorn Alas! wretched, happy, ineffectual labourer of time's moments that I am! who shall deliver me from this Spirit of Abstraction & Improvidence? Such, my Dear Sir, Is the truth of my state, & I tell it you in palliation of my seeming neglect of your most pleasant orders

Meanwhile Hayley, self-satisfied, sentimental, and insensitive, was indulging his old-lady-like propensities

Of H's birth this was the happy lot,
His Mother on his Father him begot, by treating his long-suffering protégé as little better than a hired companion His presence was indispensable while Hayley was composing, and he was also required to carry out bright little ideas of Hayley's own For instance, Hayley

Hayley was not pleased with Flaxman's sketches for Cowper's tomb, and presumptuously have tried myself to out-design my dear Flaxman himself on this most animating occasion. I formed, therefore, a device of the Bible upright supporting "The Task" with a laurel wreath and Palms, such as I send you neatly copied by our kind Blake. If her Ladyship [Lady Hesketh] and Flaxman are as much pleased with my idea, as the good Blake and Paulina of Lavant are, all our difficulties on this grand monumental contention will end most happily.

Sometimes he even acted as amanuensis to Hayley, whose eyes were weak, but not too weak to inflict his favourite Klopstock on his companion. Blake, it would appear, had already recorded his opinion of Klopstock, usually printed in these polite days in an expurgated form, and must have exercised some control in not pouring out the full torrent of the original on Hayley's head. The MS "Genesis The Seven Days of the Created World," about two hundred lines of blank verse, obviously not by Blake himself, is probably a translation of Klopstock by Hayley, transcribed by Blake. Hayley's own opera, nocturnal and diurnal, also formed part of his patient companion's pabulum, "the Verses that Hayley sung When my heart knock'd against the roof of my tongue." The Greek lessons based on Cowper's translation of the Iliad must have been some alleviation, and perhaps also the morning ride, Hayley, with his umbrella, leading, no doubt, on a charger, and Blake paying sufficient attention to the physical world to follow him in safety on Bruno, the pony lent to him by Miss Harriet Poole of Lavant, with whom Hayley was in the habit of breakfasting twice a week. Together they visited neighbours, such as Miss Poole, and were present at the death-bed of Hayley's old servant, William. Hayley's friends were as blind as himself in their patronage. Lady Bathurst, to whose children Blake had given some drawing lessons, proposed to engage him as salaried painter in ordinary to the family, and the only order he ever refused, a set of handscreens, is supposed to have been hers.

Enough has been said to show that the atmosphere of Felpham would have been sufficiently trying to any person of aesthetic and ecstatic tendencies, intolerable to the poet and

and artist, and still more intolerable to the mystic, whose absorbing spiritual conflicts must of themselves precipitate him suddenly from high heavenly places into caverns of seemingly endless gloom "The Visions were angry with me at Felpham," Blake used to say in after years In Lambeth it had at least been possible to secure solitude, but at Felpham Hayley was all-pervasive Well might the spiritual form of his umbrella frighten visions away

It is to Blake's credit that the storm was so slow in bursting In his letter to Butts of 10th January 1802 there is an ominous rumble He begins by saying that he has been ill, and Mrs Blake, who had been constantly plagued by ague and rheumatism, very ill Then he confides to Butts that

When I came down here, I was more sanguine than I am at present, but it was because I was ignorant of many things which have since occurred, & chiefly the unhealthiness of the place Yet I do not repent of coming on a thousand accounts, & Mr H, I doubt not, will do ultimately all that both he & I wish—that is, to lift me out of difficulty, but this is no easy matter to a man who, having Spiritual Enemies of such formidable magnitude, cannot expect to want natural hidden ones

Then follows a refusal of pecuniary help from Butts "our expenses are small, & our income, from our incessant labour, fully adequate to them at present"

Later in the same letter he recurs to his confidences and enlarges on the situation

But you have so generously & openly desired that I will divide my griefs with you, that I cannot hide what it has now become my duty to explain—My unhappiness has arisen from a source which, if explor'd too narrowly, might hurt my pecuniary circumstances, As my dependence is on Engraving at present, & particularly on the Engravings I have in hand for Mr H & I find on all hands great objections to my doing anything but the meer drudgery of business, & intimations that if I do not confine myself to this, I shall not live, this has always pursu'd me You will understand by this the source of all my uneasiness This from Johnson & Fuseli brought me down here, & this from Mr H will bring me back again, for that I cannot live without doing my duty to lay up treasures in heaven is Certain & Determined, & to this I have long made up my mind, & why this should be made an objection to me, while Drunkenness, Lewdness, Gluttony & even Idleness itself, do not hurt other men, let Satan himself Explain The Thing I have most at Heart—more than life, or all that seems to make life comfortable without—Is the Interest of True Religion & Science,

& whenever any thing appears to affect that Interest (Especially if I myself omit any duty to my Station as a Soldier of Christ), It gives me the greatest of torments I am not ashamed, afraid, or averse to tell you what Ought to be Told That I am under the direction of Messengers from Heaven, Daily & Nightly, but the nature of such things is not, as some suppose, without trouble or care Temptations are on the right hand & left, behind, the sea of time & space roars and follows swiftly, he who keeps not right onward is lost, & if our foot-steps slide in clay, how can we do otherwise than fear & tremble? but I should not have troubled You with this account of my spiritual state, unless it had been necessary in explaining the actual cause of my uneasiness, into which you are so kind as to Enquire for I never obtrude such things on others unless question'd, & then I never disguise the truth

Blake's miniatures help us to picture Mr and Mrs Butts receiving this letter, she, perhaps, thought it a trifle fantastic, and he, though his eyes twinkled a little, damned Hayley for a fool there was no taint of "holiness" or "officious brotherhood" in Mr Butts, despite his respect for the Archbishop of Canterbury Blake's two letters to him of 22nd November 1802 were written in the lull before the storm

And now let me finish with assuring you that, Tho' I have been very unhappy, I am so no longer I am again Emerged into the light of day, I still & shall to Eternity Embrace Christianity and Adore him who is the Express image of God, but I have travel'd thro' Perils & Darkness not unlike a Champion I have Conquer'd, and shall Go on Conquering Nothing can withstand the fury of my Course among the Stars of God & in the Abysses of the Accuser My Enthusiasm is still what it was, only Enlarged and confirm'd

The second letter encloses some verses written a year before "which My Wife desires me to Copy out & send you with her kind love & Respect," the lines beginning "With happiness stretch'd across the hills," the history of an hour in the three years' struggle amid the incompatibilities of Felpham,

With Angels planted in Hawthorn bowers
And God himself in the passing hours, and Hayley reading his own verses aloud The poem ends with one of those triumphs of the spirit which prolonged the struggle

Now I a fourfold vision see,
And a fourfold vision is given to me,

'Tis fourfold in my supreme delight
 And threefold in soft Beulah's night
 And twofold Always May God us keep
 From Single vision & Newton's sleep!

Blake's confidences to Butts must be supplemented by his account of the quarrel in the symbolic book of Milton, partly written at Felpham. The story can be deciphered from the Bard's Song in the earlier pages of the First Book, where certain states or aspects of the persons concerned are personified. Hayley, in the aspect inimical to Blake's spiritual welfare and poetic and artistic inspiration, figures as Satan, Blake forbearing and pitiful as Palambron, indignant with Hayley and fighting for his spiritual interests symbolized by Michael, as Rintrah, Mrs. Blake the peacemaker, as Enitharmon, Hayley's feeble muse as Leutha, and Blake's poetic inspiration as Elynittria. For the division into Angels and Devils of The Marriage of Heaven and Hell is substituted a fourfold classification, the Elect, the conventionally moral and religious, the Reprobate or Transgressors, "who never cease to Believe," corresponding to the Devils of The Marriage of Heaven and Hell, and an intermediate class of the Redeemed "Who live in doubts & fears perpetually tormented by the Elect," "They are the Two Contraries & the Reasoning Negative." But the Eternal Man is none of these.

Here the Three Classes of Men take their Sexual texture, Woven,
 The Sexual is Threefold, the Human is Fourfold

Hayley, of course, belonged to the Elect, Blake as Palambron to the Redeemed, but as Rintrah to the Reprobate. Hayley's interference is described as Satan's mildness and his self-imposition,

 Seeming a brother, being a tyrant, even thinking himself a brother While he is murdering the just

Blake is in a dilemma, if he shows anger Hayley will accuse him of ingratitude, but he has not forgotten the truth of his Song of Experience, "A Poison Tree," and reflects that

If you account it Wisdom when you are angry to be silent and Not to shew it, I do not account that Wisdom, but Folly
 Every Man's Wisdom is peculiar to his own Individuality

He attempts a persuasive explanation. Hayley, annoyed
 but

but tearfully sentimental, asserts that the fault is on Blake's side, and denies that he has exercised any restraint. They come to an understanding that Blake shall not curb himself "in pity false" or Hayley be active "in officious brotherhood." But Blake cannot keep his originality out of his work for Hayley, and Hayley, incapable of giving him a free hand, is dissatisfied with the results. Blake is angry and there is a crisis—"this mournful day Must be a blank in Nature", no work is done, but the Blakes and Hayley fruitlessly discuss the situation. Hot words on both sides might have led to a genuine reconciliation, but Blake, now "reprobate," is indignant at Hayley's soft dissimulation of friendship. Exhausted by spiritual conflict he prays in despair

O God, protect me from my friends, that they have not power over me

Thou has giv'n me power to protect myself from my bitterest enemies

Hayley, "not having the Science of Wrath, but only of Pity" (which may be translated as sentimentality where Blake uses the word in a bad sense), finally lost his temper, and, as Blake had feared, accused him of ingratitude and malice. Mrs. Blake, who apparently had some sympathy to spare for Hayley as Emitharmon is described as having "kissed Satan," tries in vain to make peace. Then Blake comes to the conclusion which is voiced by Hayley's muse, Leutha, that Hayley's "admiration join'd with envy" of Blake had caused the trouble, hence the provoking attempts to tyrannize over Blake which had caused Hayley

To do unkind things in kindness, with power arm'd to say
The most irritating things in the midst of tears and love

Finally the quarrel ended with a friendly agreement that the Blakes should return to London, as Blake tells Butts in his letter of 25th April 1803.

And now, My Dear Sir, Congratulate me on my return to London, with the full approbation of Mr. Hayley & with Promise—But, Alas!

Now I may say to you what perhaps I should not dare to say to anyone else. That I can alone carry on my visionary studies in London unannoy'd, & that I may converse with my friends in Eternity, See Visions, Dream Dreams & prophecy & speak Parables unobserv'd & at

at liberty from the Doubts of other Mortals, perhaps Doubts proceeding from Kindness, but Doubts are always pernicious, Especially when we Doubt our Friends Christ is very decided on this Point "He who is Not With Me is Against Me" There is no Medium or Middle state, & if a Man is the Enemy of my Spiritual Life while he pretends to be the Friend of my Corporeal, he is a Real Enemy—but the Man may be the friend of my Spiritual Life while he seems the Enemy of my Corporeal, but Not Vice Versa

In a further letter to Butts of 6th July 1803 Blake returns to the subject

As to Mr H, I feel myself at liberty to say as follows upon this ticklish subject I regard Fashion in Poetry as little as I do in Painting, so, if both Poets & Painters should alternately dislike (but I know the majority of them will not), I am not to regard it at all, but Mr H approves of My Designs as little as he does of my Poems, and I have been forced to insist on his leaving me in both to my own Self Will, for I am determin'd to be no longer Pester'd with his Genteel Ignorance & Polite Disapprobation I know myself both Poet & Painter, & it is not his affected Contempt that can move to anything but a more assiduous pursuit of both Arts Indeed, by my late Firmness I have brought down his affected Loftiness, & he begins to think I have some Genius as if Genius & Assurance were the same thing! but his imbecile attempts to depress Me only deserve laughter I say this much to you, knowing that you will not make a bad use of it But it is a Fact too true That, if I had only depended on Mortal Things, both myself & my wife must have been Lost

In the interval before these last two letters to Butts Blake had written a long letter to his brother James It is the only letter extant to a member of his own family Two projects are mentioned which came to nothing, another country home and lucrative publication on a large scale Blake had been much impressed by Hayley's business capacity, though the master-stroke by which he secured a handsome annuity from his publisher was yet to come

To JAMES BLAKE

Jany 30, 1803

DEAR BROTHER,

Your Letter mentioning Mr Butts' account of my Ague surprised me because I have no Ague, but have had a Cold this Winter You know that it is my way to make the best of everything I never make myself nor my friends uneasy if I can help it My Wife had had Agues & Rheumatism almost ever since she has been here, but our time is almost out that we took the Cottage for I did not mention our Sickness to you & should not to Mr Butts but for a determination

which we have lately made, namely To Leave This Place, because I am now certain of what I have long doubted, Viz that H is jealous as Stothard was & will be no further My friend that he is compell'd by circumstances The truth is, As a Poet he is frightened at me & as a Painter his views & mine are opposite, he thinks to turn me into a Portrait Painter as he did Poor Romney, but this he nor all the devils in hell will never do I must own that seeing H like S, envious (& that he is I am now certain) made me very uneasy, but it is over & I now defy the worst & fear not while I am true to myself which I will be This is the uneasiness I spoke of to Mr Butts, but I did not tell him so plain & wish you to keep it a secret & to burn this letter because it speaks so plain

I told Mr Butts that [I] did not wish to explain too much the cause of our determination to leave Felpham because of pecuniary connexions between H & me—Be not then uneasy on any account & tell my Sister not to be uneasy, for I am fully Employed & Well Paid I have made it so much H's interest to employ me that he can no longer treat me with indifference & now it is in my power to stay or return or remove to any other place that I choose, because I am getting beforehand in money matters The Profits arising from Publications are immense, & I now have it in my power to commence publication with many very formidable works, which I have finished & ready A Book price half a guinea may be got out at the Expense of Ten pounds & its almost certain profits are 500 G I am only sorry that I did not know the methods of publishing years ago, & this is one of the numerous benefits I have obtained by coming here, for I should never have known the nature of Publication unless I had known H & his connexions & his method of managing It now would be folly not to venture publishing I am now engraving Six little plates for a little work of Mr H's, for which I am to have 10 Guineas each, & the certain profits of that work are a fortune such as make me independent, supposing that I would substantiate such a one of my own & I mean to try many But I again say as I said before, We are very Happy sitting at tea by a wood fire in our Cottage, the wind singing about our roof & the Sea roaring at a distance but if sickness comes all is unpleasant

But my letter to Mr Butts appears to me not to be so explicit as that to you, for I told you that I should come to London in the Spring to commence Publisher & he has offered me every assistance in his power without knowing my intention But since I wrote yours we had made the resolution of which we informed him viz to leave Felpham entirely I also told you what I was about & that I was not ignorant of what was doing in London in works of art But I did not mention Illness because I hoped to get better (for I was really very ill when I wrote to him the last time) & was not then perswaded as I am now that the air tho' warm is unhealthy

However, this I know will set you at Ease I am now so full of work that I have had no time to go on with the Ballads, & my prospects of more & more work continually are certain My Heads of Cowper for Mr H's life of Cowper have pleased his Relations exceedingly ingly & in Particular Lady Hesketh and Lord Cowper—to please Lady H was a doubtful chance who almost ador'd her Cousin the poet & thought him all perfection, & she writes that she is quite satisfied with the portraits & charm'd by the great Head in particular, tho' she never could bear the original Picture ¹

But I ought to mention to you that our present idea is To take a house in some village further from the Sea, Perhaps Lavant, & in or near the road to London for the sake of convenience I also ought to inform [you] that I read your letter to Mr H & that he is very afraid of losing me & also very afraid that my Friends in London should have a bad opinion of the reception he has given to me But My Wife has undertaken to Print the whole number of the Plates for Cowper's work, which she does to admiration, & being under my own eye the prints are as fine as the French prints & please everyone In short I have got everything so under my thumb that it is more profitable that things should be as they are than any other way, tho' not so agreeable, because we wish naturally for friendship in preference to interest The Publishers are already indebted to My Wife Twenty Guineas for work deliver'd, this is a small specimen of how we go on Then fear nothing & let my Sister fear nothing because it appears to me that I am now too old & have had too much experience to be any longer imposed upon, only illness makes all uncomfortable & this we must prevent by every means in our power

I send with this 5 Copies of N 4 of the Ballads for Mrs Flaxman and Five more, two of which you will be so good as to give to Mrs Chetwynd if she should call or send for them These Ballads are likely to be Profitable, for we have Sold all that we have had time to print Evans the Bookseller in Pall Mall says they go off very well, & why should we repent of having done them? it is doing Nothing that is to be repented of & not doing such things as these

Pray remember us both to Mr Hall when you see him

I write in great haste & with a head full of botheration about various projected works & particularly a work now Proposed to the Public at the end of Cowper's Life which will very likely be of great consequence It is Cowper's Milton, the same that Fuseli's Milton Gallery was painted for, & if we succeed in our intentions the prints to this work will be very profitable to me and not only profitable, but honourable at anyrate The Project pleases Lord Cowper's family, & I am now labouring in my thoughts Designs for this & other works equally creditable These are works to be boasted of, & therefore I cannot feel depress'd, tho' I know that as far as Designing & Poetry are concern'd I am envied in many quarters, but I will cram the dogs, for I know that the Public are my friends & love my works & will embrace them whenever they see them My only Difficulty is to produce fast enough

I go on Merrily with my Greek & Latin, am very sorry that I did not begin to learn languages early in life as I find it very easy, am now

learning my Hebrew לִיָּדָה, I read Greek as fluently as an Oxford scholar & the Testament is my chief master astonishing indeed is the English Translation, it is almost word for word, & if the Hebrew Bible is as well translated, which I do not doubt it is, we need not doubt of its having been translated as well as written by the Holy Ghost

My wife joins me in Love to you both

I am,

Sincerely Yours,

W BLAKE

The Ballads founded on Anecdotes Relating to Animals, which are referred to in this letter, were written by Hayley and illustrated by Blake The intention was to publish them in half-crown parts, each containing one ballad and three engravings, but the enterprise was a failure and only four parts were issued The Preface by Hayley explains that Blake had come from London in order to engrave the plates for his Life of Cowper, and that "there is hardly any kind of ingenious employment in which the mind requires more to be cleared and diverted, than the slow, and sometimes very irksome, progress of engraving, Especially, when that art is exercised by a person of varied talents and of a creative imagination" He had therefore written these ballads, "to Amuse the Artist in his patient labour," and wished that he should profit by the illustrations he had made for them In 1805 another edition was published by Phillips, containing five plates of reduced size but more finished execution, two of which had not appeared before Hayley had suggested that Blake should write an advertisement for this issue, and in a letter of 25th April 1805 Blake says:

The public ought to be informed that the Ballads were the effusions of friendship to countenance what their author is kindly pleased to call talents for designing and to relieve my more laborious engagement of engraving those portraits which accompany the Life of Cowper Out of a number of designs I have selected five, and hope that the public will approve of my rather giving a few highly laboured plates than have a greater number and less finished If I have succeeded in these, more may be added at pleasure

But Phillips would have none of it "Mr Phillips objects altogether to the insertion of my Advertisement, calling it an appeal to charity, and says it will hurt the sale of the work"

This edition was also a failure Southey ridiculed the ballads ballads in a notice in The Annual Review for 1805, adding

The poet has had the singular good fortune to meet with a painter capable of doing full justice to his conceptions, and, in fact, when we look at the delectable frontispiece to this volume which represents Edward starting back, Fido Volant, and the crocodile rampant, with a mouth open like a boot-jack to receive him we know not whether most to admire the genius of Mr William Blake or of Mr William Hayley

Half a century later a better judge paid an amusing tribute to the illustrations D G Rossetti, writing to thank Allingham for a copy of the Ballad, says

Old Blake is quite as lovable by his oddities as by his genius, and the drawings to the ballads abound with both The two nearly faultless are the "Eagle" and the "Hermit's Dog" Ruskin's favourite (who has been looking at it) is the "Horse", but I can't quite myself get over the intensity of comic decorum in the brute's face He seems absolutely snuffing with propriety The lion seems singing a comic song with a pen behind his ear, but the glimpse of distant landscape below is lovely The only drawing where the comic element riots almost unrebuked is the one of the dog jumping down the crocodile

A ridiculous but in those days alarming incident, graphically described in a letter to Butts of 16th August 1803, made the parting more friendly than it might otherwise have been

I am at Present in a Bustle to defend myself against a very unwarrantable warrant from a Justice of Peace in Chichester, which was taken out against me by a Private in Captn Leathes's troop of 1st or Royal Dragoons, for an assault & seditious words The wretched man has terribly Perjur'd himself, as has his Comrade, for, as to Sedition, not one Word relating to the King or Government was spoken by either him or me His Enmity arises from my having turned him out of my Garden, into which he was invited as an assistant by a Gardener at work therein, without my knowledge that he was so invited I desired him, as politely as was possible, to go out of the Garden, he made me an impertinent answer I insisted on his leaving the Garden, he refused I still persisted in desiring his departure, he then threaten'd to knock out my Eyes, with many abominable imprecations & with some contempt for my Person, it affronted my foolish Pride I therefore took him by the Elbows & pushed him before me till I had got him out, there I intended to have left him, but he, turning about, put himself into a Posture of Defiance, threatening & swearing at me I, perhaps foolishly & perhaps not, stepped out at the Gate, &, putting aside his blows, took him again by the Elbows, &, keeping his back to me, pushed him forward down the road about fifty yards—he all the while endeavouring to turn round & strike me, & raging & cursing, which drew out several neighbours, at length, when I had got him to where he was Quarter'd, which was very quickly done, we were met at the Gate by the Master of house, The Fox Inn (who is the proprietor of my Cottage), & his wife & Daughter & the Man's Comrade & several other people My Landlord compell'd the Soldiers to go indoors, after many abusive threats against me & my wife from the two Soldiers, but not one word of threat on account of Sedition was utter'd at that time This method of Revenge was Plann'd between them after they had got together into the stable This is the whole outline I have for witnesses The Gardener, who is Hostler at the Fox & who Evidences that, to his knowledge, no word of the remotest tendency to Government or Sedition was utter'd, Our next door Neighbour, a Miller's wife, who saw me turn him before me down the road, & saw & heard all that happen'd at the Gate of the Inn, who Evidences that no Expression of threatening on account of Sedition was utter'd in the heat of their fury by either of the Dragoons, this was the woman's own remark, & does high honour to her good sense, as she observes that, whenever a quarrel happens, the offence is always repeated The Landlord of the Inn & his Wife & daughter will Evidence the same, and will evidently prove the Comrade perjurd, who swore that he heard me, while at the Gate, utter Seditious words & D—the K—, without which perjury I could not have been committed, & I had no witness with me before the Justices who could combat his assertion, as the Gardener remain'd in my Garden all the while, & he was the only person I thought necessary to take with me I have been before a Bench of Justices at Chichester this morning, but they, as the Lawyer who wrote down the Accusation told me in private, are compell'd by the Military to suffer a prosecution to be enter'd into altho' they must know, & it is manifest, that the whole is a Fabricated Perjury I have been forced to find Bail Mr Hayley was kind enough to come forwards, and Mr Seagrave, printer at Chichester, Mr H in £100, & Mr S in £50, & myself am bound in £100 for my appearance at the Quarter Sessions, which is after Michaelmas So I shall have the satisfaction to see my friends in Town before this Contemptible business comes on I say Contemptible, for it must be manifest to everyone that the whole accusation is a wilful Perjury Thus, you see, my dear Friend, that I cannot leave this place without some adventure, it has struck a consternation thro' all the Villages round Every Man is now afraid of speaking to, or looking at, a Soldier, for the peaceable Villagers have always been forward in expressing their kindness for us, & they express their sorrow at our departure as soon as they hear of it Everyone here is my Evidence for Peace & Good Neighbourhood, & yet, such is the present state of things, this foolish accusation must be tried in Public Well, I am content, I murmur not & doubt not that I shall recieve Justice, & am only sorry for the trouble & expense I have heard that my Accuser is a disgraced Sergeant, his name is John Scholfield, perhaps it will be in your power to learn somewhat about the Man I am very ignorant of what I am requesting of you, I only suggest what I know you will be kind enough to Excuse if you can learn nothing about him, & what, I as well know, if it is possible, you will be kind enough to do in this matter.

Impressed

Impressed by Hayley's genuine kindness Blake feels that his own personality has been largely responsible for the friction with him, so continues

Dear Sir, This perhaps was suffer'd to Clear up some doubts, & to give opportunity to those whom I doubted to clear themselves of all imputation If a Man offends me ignorantly & not designedly, surely I ought to consider him with favour & affection Perhaps the simplicity of myself is the origin of all offences committed against me If I have found this, I shall have learned a most valuable thing, well worth three years' perseverance I have found it It is certain that a too passive manner, inconsistent with my active physiognomy, had done me much mischief I must now express to you my conviction that all is come from the spiritual World for Good, & not for Evil

Give me your advice in my perilous adventure, burn what I have peevishly written about any friend I have been very much degraded & injuriously treated, but if it all arise from my own fault, I ought to blame myself

O why was I born with a different face?
Why was I not born like the rest of my race?
When I look, each one starts! when I speak, I offend,
Then I'm silent & passive & lose every Friend

Then my verse I dishonour, My pictures despise, My person degrade & my temper chastise,
And the pen is my terror, the pencil my shame,
All my Talents I bury, and dead is my Fame

I am either too low or too highly priz'd,
When Elate I am Envy'd, When Meek I'm despis'd

This is but too just a Picture of my Present state I pray God to keep you & all men from it, & to deliver me in his own good time

Shortly before the trial Hayley, the chief witness as to Blake's character and peaceful habits, had been pitched on his head, having perhaps frightened his horse by unfurling the inevitable umbrella, but had maintained that "living or dying" he would be present This noble behaviour called forth expressions of anxiety and gratitude from his "devoted rebel!"

I write immediately on my arrival, not merely to inform you that in a conversation with an old soldier, who came in the coach with me, I learned that no one, not even the most expert horseman, ought to ever mount a trooper's horse They are taught so many tricks, such as stopping short, falling down on their knees, running sideways, and in various and innumerable ways endeavouring to throw the rider, that it is a miracle if a stranger escape with his life All this I learned with some alarm, and heard also what the soldier said confirmed by another person person in the coach I therefore, as it is my duty, beg and entreat you never to mount that wretched horse again, nor again trust to one who has been so educated God, our Saviour, watch over you and preserve you Pray, my dear sir, favour me with a line concerning your health, how you have escaped the double blow both from the wretched horse and from your innocent humble servant, whose heart and soul are more and more drawn out towards you, Felpham, and its kind inhabitants I feel anxious, and therefore pray to my God and Father for the health of Miss Poole, and hope that the pang of affection and gratitude is the gift of God for good I am thankful that I feel it, it draws the soul towards eternal life, and conjunction with spirits of just men made perfect by love and gratitude—the two angels who stand at heaven's gate, ever open, ever inviting guests to the marriage O foolish Philosophy! Gratitude is heaven itself, there could be no Heaven without gratitude, I feel it and I know it I thank God and man for it, and above all, you, my dear friend and benefactor in the Lord

Blake had awaited his trial with considerable anxiety In a letter to Hayley of 13th December 1803 he says "Business comes in, and I shall be at ease if this infernal business of the soldier can be got over" Flaxman, who doubtless felt some responsibility for the difficulties in which Hayley had been involved by his introduction to Blake, makes some pious comments on the situation in a letter to Hayley of 2nd January 1804

I sincerely wish with you that the trial was over, that our poor friend's peace of mind might be restored, although I have no doubt from what I have heard of the soldier's character and the merits of the case, that the bill will at least be thrown out by the Court as groundless and vexatious Blake's irritability, as well as the association and arrangement of his ideas, do not seem likely to be soothed or more advantageously disposed by any power inferior to That by which man is originally endowed with his faculties

After the trial Blake wrote that Flaxman had "welcomed me with kind affection and generous exultation in my escape from the arrows of darkness"

The information laid by Schofield was as follows

The Information and Complaint of John Schofield, a Private Soldier in His Majesty's First Regiment of Dragoons, taken upon his Oath, this 15th Day of August, 1803, before me, One of His Majesty's Justices of the Peace, in and for the County aforesaid

Who saith, that on the twelfth Day of this Instant August, at the Parish of Felpham, in the County aforesaid, one — Blake, a Miniature Painter, and now residing in the said Parish of Felpham, did utter the following seditious expressions, viz, that we (meaning the People of England)

England) were like a Parcel of Children, that they would play with themselves till they got scalded and burnt, that the French Knew our Strength very well, and if Bonaparte should come he would be Master of Europe in an Hour's Time, that England might depend upon it, that when he set his Foot on English Ground that every Englishman would have his choice whether to have his Throat cut, or to join the French, and that he was a strong Man, and would certainly begin to cut Throats, and the strongest Man must conquer—that he damned the King of England—his country, and his subjects, that his Soldiers were all bound for Slaves, and all the Poor People in general—that his Wife then came up, and said to him, this is nothing to you at present, but that the King of England would run himself so far into the Fire, that he might get himself out again, and altho' she was but a Woman, she would fight as long as she had a drop of blood in her—to which the said — Blake said, My Dear, you would not fight against France—she replied no, I would for Bonaparte as long as I am able—that the said — Blake, then addressing himself to this Informant, said, tho' you are one of the King's Subjects, I have told what I have said before greater People than you, and that this Informant was sent by his Captain to Esquire Hayley to hear what he had to say, and to go and tell them—that his Wife then told her said Husband to turn this Informant out of the garden—that this Informant thereupon turned round to go peaceably out, when the said — Blake pushed this Deponent out of the Garden into the Road down which he followed this Informant, and twice took this Informant by the Collar, without this Informant's making any Resistance and at the same Time the said Blake damned the King, and said the Soldiers were all Slaves

JOHN SCHOFIELD

Blake was not legally represented at the hearing by the magistrates, but afterwards refuted the charge himself in a business-like memorandum. He indicates the weak points in Schofield's statement and the nature of the evidence which he will be able to bring forward on his own behalf, ending with the protest.

If such a Perjury as this can take effect, any Villain in future may come and drag me and my Wife out of our House, and beat us in the Garden or use us as he please or is able, and afterwards go and swear our Lives away

Is it not in the Power of any Thief who enters a Mans' Dwelling and robs him, or misuses his Wife or Children, to go and swear as this Man has sworn?

Blake, who had left Felpham before 19th September 1803, went back to stand his trial for high treason at the Chichester Quarter Sessions on 11th January 1804. Hayley had engaged Cowper's friend, Samuel Rose, as Counsel. His speech, as it survives from a shorthand report report, is clear and effective, but contains no addition to the facts contained in Blake's memorandum except the discrepancy between the evidence of Schofield and his comrade, Cock, the latter swearing that the seditious words had been uttered outside the Fox Inn, instead of in the garden, as alleged by Schofield

The Sussex Advertiser of 16th January records that

William Blake, an engraver at Felpham, was tried on a charge exhibited against him by two soldiers for having uttered seditious and treasonable expressions, such as "D——n the King, d——n all his subjects, d——n his soldiers, they are all slaves, when Bonaparte comes, it will be cut-throat for cut-throat, and the weakest must go to the wall, I will help him, etc etc"

Blake, his eyes flashing, shouted "False" at the more preposterous accusations, and, after a lengthy hearing, was finally acquitted amid uproarious applause Hayley carried off "the delivered artist" to a late supper with Miss Poole Gilchrist, without naming his authority, states that Blake afterwards believed that Schofield had been employed to entrap him by the Government, or someone in high place who knew of his former connection with Paine and the radical set, but it is unlikely that Blake seriously entertained this improbable theory

Nearly a year after the trial Blake lamented the death of his able counsel, who had suffered from prolonged ill-health Writing to Hayley, he says

Farewell, Sweet Rose! thou hast got before me into the Celestial City I also have but a few more Mountains to pass, for I hear the bells ring & the trumpets sound to welcome thy arrival among Cowper's Glorified Band of Spirits of Just Men made Perfect!

Mrs Blake must have been thankful to leave Felpham She had suffered from constant ill-health Miss Blake's visits were probably a further trial as the tradition that they did not get on well together is supported by Blake's lines, composed on his way to meet Miss Blake

Must my Wife live in my Sister's bane,
Or my Sister survive on my Love's pain?

Blake himself had required his wife's sympathy in his difficulties with Hayley, and also her assistance in his labour in "Felpham's Old Mill" She must have been exhausted exhausted by her efforts at peace-making, and was, as a climax, "much-terrified" by the Schofield incident

For Blake himself the "Three Years Slumber on the Banks of the Ocean" were fruitful despite the tame Hayley, the damp cottage, and work unworthy of his genius. His knowledge of the country hitherto had been confined to long walks and occasional short expeditions from London. The water-colour drawing, "The Spirit of God moves upon the Face of the Waters," must have been inspired by this his first sight of the open sea. Not only are his Felpham letters full of references to his enjoyment of his surroundings, but Milton shows an intimate observation of nature which is not present in his earlier books

Thou hearest the Nightingale begin the Song of Spring
The Lark sitting upon his earthy bed, just as the morn Appears, listens silent, then springing from the waving Cornfield, loud

He leads the choir of Day trill, trill, trill, tuill, Mounting upon the wings of light into the Great Expanse, Reechoing against the lovely blue & shining heavenly Shell
His little throat labours with inspiration, every feather
On throat & breast & wings vibrates with the effluence Divine
All Nature listens silent to him, & the awful Sun Stands still upon the Mountain looking on this little Bird
With eyes of soft humility & wonder, love & awe
Then loud from their green covert all the Birds begin their Song
The Thrush, the Linnet & the Gold finch, Robin & the Wren Awake the Sun from his sweet reverie upon the Mountain
The Nightingale again assays his Song, & thro' the day
And thro' the night warbles luxuriant, every Bird of Song Attending his loud harmony with admiration & love
This is a Vision of the Lamentation of Beulah over Ololon

Thou perceivest the Flowers put forth their precious Odours,
And none can tell how from so small a center comes such sweets, Forgetting within that Center Eternity expands
Its ever during doors that Og and Anak fiercely guard
First, e'er the morning breaks, joy opens in the flowery bosoms, Joy even to tears, which the Sun rising dries, first the Wild Thyme
And Meadow-sweet, downy & soft waving among the reeds, Light springing on the air, lead the sweet Dance they wake
The Honeysuckle sleeping on the Oak, the flaunting beauty Revels along upon the wind, the White-thorn, lovely May,
Opens her many lovely eyes listening, the Rose still sleeps,
None dare to wake her, soon she bursts her crimson curtain'd bed
And comes forth in the majesty of beauty, every Flower,
The Pink, the Jessamine, the Wall-flower, the Carnation,

The

The Jonquil, the mild Lilly opes her heavens, every Tree
And Flower & Herb soon fill the air with an innumerable Dance, Yet all in order sweet & lovely Men are sick with Love Such is a Vision of the lamentation of Beulah over Ololon

He knows the host of insects whom his contemporary,
John Clare, also loved

Timbrels & violins sport round the Wine-presses, the little Seed,
The sportive Root, the Earth-worm, the gold Beetle, the wise Emmet

Dance round the Wine-presses of Luvah the Centipede is there,
The ground Spider with many eyes, the Mole clothed in velvet,
The ambitious Spider in his sullen web, the lucky golden Spinner,
The Earwig arm'd, the tender Maggot, emblem of immortality,
The Flea, Louse, Bug, the Tape-worm, all the Armies of Disease, Visible or invisible to the slothful vegetating Man

The slow Slug, the Grasshopper that sings & laughs & drinks Winter comes, he folds his slender bones without a murmur
The cruel Scorpion is there, the Gnat, Wasp, Hornet & the Honey Bee,

The Toad & venomous Newt, the Serpent cloth'd in gems & gold They throw off their gorgeous raiment they rejoice with loud jubilee

Around the Wine-presses of Luvah, naked & drunk with wine

Though his visionary life was interrupted by the conditions of his companionship to Hayley, yet as he wandered by the sea he communed with the great poets of the past, beholding them as "majestic shadows, gray but luminous, and superior to the common height of men" The overwhelming vision recorded in Milton appeared to him, and it was at Felpham that he saw a fairy's funeral

"Did you ever see a fairy's funeral, madam?" he once said to a lady, who happened to sit by him in company "Never, sir!" was the answer "I have," said Blake, "but not before last night I was walking alone in my garden, there was great stillness among the branches and flowers and more than common sweetness in the air, I heard a low and pleasant sound, and I knew not whence it came At last I saw the broad leaf of a flower move, and underneath I saw a procession of creatures of the size and colour of green and gray grasshoppers, bearing a body laid out on a rose leaf, which they buried with songs, and then disappeared It was a fairy funeral"

His unfettered work for Mr Butts, although it had often

to give way to the exigencies of the "Mills," was a relief and pleasure to Blake "Your approbation of my pictures is a multitude to me" He appears to have sent Butts several drawings toward the end of 1801, eight others in the summer of 1803, and to have brought back from Felpham ten in a more or less finished state

In his letter to Dr Trusler of 16th August 1799 he had spoken of himself as "a scholar of Rembrandt & Teniers, whom I have studied no less than Rafael and Michaelangelo" But at Felpham he freed himself from both Dutch and Venetian influences, and returned to his youthful ideal, uniformity of colour and long continuation of lines He tells Butts on 10th January 1802

One thing of real consequence I have accomplish'd by coming into the country, which is to me consolation enough namely, I have recollected all my scatter'd thoughts on Art & resumed my primitive & original ways of Execution in both painting & engraving, which in the confusion of London I had very much lost & obliterated from my mind

Nor was the poet idle The references in his letters to a poem of great length composed at Felpham have been variously applied to Vala, to Milton, and to his later epic, Jerusalem Internal evidence suggests that Milton was partly written at Felpham, but it is unlikely that Jerusalem took shape before his return to London, as it represents a later stage in the development of his ideas, and is metrically more irregular Blake says in a letter to Butts of 25th April 1803

But none can know the Spiritual Acts of my three years' Slumber on the banks of the Ocean, unless he has seen them in the Spirit, or unless he should read My long Poem descriptive of those Acts, for I have in these three years composed an immense number of verses on One Grand Theme, Similar to Homer's Iliad or Milton's Paradise Lost, the Persons & Machinery intirely new to the Inhabitants of Earth (some of the Persons Excepted) I have written this Poem from immediate Dictation, twelve or sometimes twenty or thirty lines at a time, without Premeditation & even against my Will, the Time it has taken in writing was thus render'd Non Existent, & an immense Poem Exists which seems to be the Labour of a long Life, all produc'd without Labour or Study I mention this to show you what I think the Grand Reason of my being brought down here

And again in a later letter of 6th July 1803

Thus I hope that all our three years' trouble Ends in Good Luck at last

last & shall be forgot by my affections & only remember'd by my Understanding, to be a Memento in time to come, & to speak to future generations by a Sublime Allegory, which is now perfectly completed into a Grand Poem I may praise it, since I dare not pretend to be any other than the Secretary, the Authors are in Eternity I consider it as the Grandest Poem that this World Contains Allegory addressed to the Intellectual powers, while it is altogether hidden from the Corporeal Understanding, is My Definition of the Most Sublime Poetry, it is also somewhat in the same manner defin'd by Plato This Poem shall, by Divine Assistance, be progressively Printed & Ornamented with Prints & given to the Public But of this work I take care to say little to Mr H, since he is as much averse to my poetry as he is to a Chapter in the Bible He knows that I have writ it, for I have shown it to him, & he has read Part by his own desire & has looked with sufficient contempt to enhance my opinion of it But I do not wish to irritate by seeming too obstinate in Poetic pursuits But if all the World should set their faces against This, I have Orders to set my face like a flint (Ezekiel iiiC, 9v) against their faces, & my forehead against their foreheads

The poem shown to Hayley was probably Vala, which answers best to the above description, but even had it been the first book of Milton containing the account of their quarrel, as supposed by some critics, the assumption that Blake thought the subject matter so concealed that Hayley could not recognize it is unnecessary In Milton these earthly happenings are treated sub specie æternitatis not as they appeared to the writer in a passing mood, The Bard's Song is a work of art, detached, impartial It would not have occurred to Blake that Hayley, if he perceived its drift, would think it unkind and personal Moreover, Blake never blames individuals, where he appears to do so he is using them, as for example he uses Sir Joshua and Newton, to represent some doctrine which he considers pernicious The personages of Milton are not individuals disguised under false names, but embodied "states" The epigrams on Hayley belong to a different category They are ebullitions by which Blake relieved his irritability in a private notebook, intended neither for the eye of the victim nor for publication Blake would have said of them as of a letter to Butts—"burn what I have peevishly written about any friend." One of these epigrams has been variously interpreted

When H—y finds out what you cannot do,
That is the very thing he'll set you to

If

If you break not your Neck, 'tis not his fault,
 But pecks of poison are not pecks of salt
 And when he could not act upon my wife
 Hired a Villain to bereave my Life

The fifth line no doubt refers to some attempt of Hayley's to secure Mrs Blake's support in his efforts to confine her husband to the Mill, the sixth suggests that, having failed, he instigated some one else to deprive Blake of spiritual life by urging his worldly interest. There is no clue to the identity of this tool, but Hayley's immediate kindness and Blake's gratitude rule out the matter of fact interpretation that Blake suspected Hayley of contriving the Schofield incident in order that he might be hanged for high treason.

Some of the most interesting and beautiful of Blake's later lyrics were written at Felpham. Besides those in his letters already mentioned, several pages of the Rossetti MS are ascribed to the years 1800-1803, and the Pickering MS to 1803.

"My Spectre around me night & day," in the Rossetti MS, expresses in lyrical form the division and discord between spectre and emanation, reason and imagination, logic and intuition, the conscious and the unconscious mind, which is elaborated in Vala and in Milton.

Nine of the stanzas of "I saw a Monk of Charlemaine" reappear in the Pickering Manuscript as "The Grey Monk," and seven in "To the Deists" of Jerusalem. All three have that famous and exquisite verse

For the tear is an intellectual thing,
 And a sigh is the Sword of an Angel King,
 And the bitter groan of the Martyr's woe
 Is an arrow from the Almighty's bow

"Beneath the white thorn, lovely May" is the earlier version of "The Golden Net" of the Pickering MS. The net, like the net of religion, is from the factory of Urizen, and symbolizes the repression of desire by the moral law.

The Pickering MS consists of eleven leaves, and contains fair copies of ten poems. The early history of the MS is not known. Rossetti had access to it about 1863, and in 1866 it was purchased by Basil Montagu Pickering, son of William Pickering, who had published an edition of the Songs of Innocence and of Experience in 1830. B M

Pickering

Pickering reissued the Songs in 1866, adding the poems from his MS in a more accurate text than that printed by Rossetti in the second volume of Gilchrist's Life. Dr Sampson, who printed the first authoritative text of all the poems in his edition of 1905, assigns them to the Felpham period on the ground that earlier versions of two poems are among the lyrics in the Rossetti MS written at that time, some lines from "Mary" were quoted in Blake's letter to Butts of 16th August 1803, and various phrases are repeated in Milton and Jerusalem. All the poems have Blake's own titles, whereas in the Rossetti MS titles are frequently lacking.

"The Mental Traveller" presents a fascinating problem, of which no satisfactory solution has yet been offered. Damon identifies the mental traveller with the mystic and endeavours to trace the five stages of the mystic way, but, even if this part of his argument carried conviction, the one thing clear about the poem is that it is dealing with a cycle. The mystic way is not a cycle—it is a figure for progress towards a definite goal through five states or regions traversed by every mystic. W. M. Rossetti's ingenious interpretation seems to come nearer to the mark.

The 'Mental Traveller' indicates an Explorer of mental phenomena. The mental phenomenon here symbolized seems to be the career of any great Idea or intellectual movement—as, for instance, Christianity, chivalry, art, etc.—represented as going through the stages of—1, birth, 2, adversity and persecution, 3, triumph and maturity, 4, decadence through over-ripeness, 5, gradual transformation, under new conditions, into another renovated Idea, which again has to pass through all the same stages. In other words, the poem represents the action and re-action of ideas upon society, and society upon Ideas.

Argument of the stanzas 2, The idea, conceived with pain, is born amid enthusiasm 3, If of masculine, enduring nature, it falls under the control and ban of the already existing state of society (the woman old) 5, As the Idea develops, the old society becomes moulded into a new society (the old woman grows young) 6, The Idea, now free and dominant, is united to Society, as it were in wedlock 8, It gradually grows old and effete, living now only upon the spiritual treasures laid up in the days of its early energy 10, These still subserve many purposes of practical good, and outwardly the Idea is in its most flourishing estate, even when sapped at its roots 11, The halo of authority and tradition, or prestige, gathering round the Idea, is symbolized in the resplendent babe born on his hearth 13, This prestige deserts the Idea itself, and attaches to some individual, who usurps the honour due due only to the Idea (as we may see in the case of papacy, royalty, etc.), and the Idea is eclipsed by its own very prestige, and assumed living representative 14, The Idea wanders homeless till it can find a new community to mould ('until he can a maiden win') 15 to 17, Finding whom, the Idea finds itself also living under strangely different conditions 18, The Idea is now "beguiled to infancy" becomes a new Idea, in working upon a fresh community, and under altered conditions 20, Nor are they yet thoroughly at one, she flees away while he pursues 22, Here we return to the first state of the case The Idea starts upon a new course—is a babe, the society it works upon has become an old society—no longer a fair virgin, but an aged woman 24, The Idea seems so new and unwonted that, the nearer it is seen, the more consternation it excites 26, None can deal with the Idea so as to develop it to the full, except the old society with which it comes into contact, and this can deal with it only by misusing it at first, whereby (as in the previous stage, at the opening of the poem) it is to be again disciplined into ultimate triumph

Another explanation may be tentatively suggested The dichotomy of male and female throughout the poem is analogous to that of spectre and emanation The old woman ill-treats the frowning babe who, as youth, "binds her down for his delight" The female babe is pursued by her lover There is a continuing cycle with no true and harmonious union The frowning babe suggests Orc, the spirit of Revolt, and the "little female babe," too precious to be touched, moral and religious ideals Does Blake, who, whatever may have been the illusions of the "Liberty Boy," now only believed in spiritual freedom through the imagination, here deny the possibility of progress in the world of space and time, since it seems to him to consist only in the vain and fruitless alternation of revolutionary and of moral and religious ideals, which in their turn beguile mankind with false hopes?

The possible reference of "Mary" to Mary Wollstonecraft has already been mentioned, and the verses in the poem also applied by Blake to his own case have been quoted "The Crystal Cabinet" symbolizes the threefold state of love, bodily, intellectual, and emotional, but lacking the spiritual which is needed to strengthen and perfect the sexual

The "Auguries of Innocence" opens with the lovely quatrain.

To see a World in a Grain of Sand
And a Heaven in a Wild Flower,

Hold

Hold Infinity in the palm of your hand
And Eternity in an hour

It is followed by couplets treating of various subjects, possibly jottings for different incompleting poems, which are not consecutively arranged. Whatever may have been Blake's intention, Dr Sampson's rearrangement enables the poem to be read as a whole.¹

The Pickering MS ends with two ballads. The first, "Long John Brown & Little Mary Bell," is the only writing of Blake's which leaves a bad taste in the mouth; it has a brutality quite absent from the coarseness of An Island in the Moon. "William Bond" has often been given an autobiographical significance by critics from D. G. Rossetti onwards. Ellis, surpassing himself in irresponsible ingenuity, finds in it the cause of Catherine Blake's childlessness. Whether the story recalls any experience in the lives of William and Catherine Blake no one can say, but the meaning of the poem is clear. William Bond is restrained by a sense of duty (the angels of Providence) from being unfaithful to his sweetheart, Mary Green, but this mechanical observance of a moral law does not bring peace in the renewal of his love for her. She, on the other hand, is ready to sacrifice herself when she knows that he loves another woman, and by her unselfishness and her piteous grief she regains his love.

There is no indication whether Blake intended to engrave the poems in the Pickering MS. He meant, it may be, to add others to their number, for instance, a final version of "Spectre and Emanation." With the addition of this and other poems from the Rossetti MS the Pickering MS carries on the tradition of the Songs of Innocence and of Experience and of the Marriage of Heaven and Hell, a tradition which should have been perfected by the Everlasting

"He who the ox to wrath has mov'd Shall never be by Woman lov'd" is one of the many instances in which a saying of Blake's has been dismissed as nonsense by ignorant or careless critics. It was a common custom in the East End of London, on which evidence was given before a Parliamentary Committee in 1828, to turn an ox loose in the street, bait it to madness, and hunt it to death. Coleridge has also uttered his protest in the "Sibylline Leaves."

Gospel, had not that great poem been unfortunately left in a fragmentary form. These lyrics are more obscure and more obviously mystical than Blake's earlier work, but the poet has successfully subdued his stubborn material, in phrasing and in metre they are the lineal successors of the Songs and of the earlier lyrics in the Rossetti MS, showing no trace of the idiosyncrasy of word and thought which marks the symbolic books. They need no defence as poetry since they are difficult only where the ideas expressed are difficult of apprehension. They are not scarred by the mystic's strife on his way toward the unitive life, which prevents the symbolic books from achieving the detachment essential to great art. These books are an integral part of the life of the man, William Blake: the lyrics and the Marriage of Heaven and Hell are the work of a poet, mystic though he be, who needs no name, whose personality calls for no explanation.

The greater part of the symbolic book Milton was also probably drafted at Felpham, although additions were made after Blake's return to London in 1803, and no copy was issued till after August 1808. Blake presumably began to engrave it in 1804, the date on the title-page. Two books only of Milton are extant, although in one copy it is clearly entitled Milton, a Poem in 12 Books. It is improbable that others were ever written. The motto below the title, "To justify the Ways of God to Men," is taken from Paradise Lost.

In the Preface occur the beautiful quatrains beginning

And did those feet in ancient time Walk upon England's mountains green?

erroneously known to the public as Jerusalem. These verses have been set to music, and are sung at religious and social assemblies, when the "dark Satanic Mills" doubtless suggest to the audience not Hayley's quiet library at Felpham or Urizen's logic, but factory labour with its attendant evils. Blake appeals in this Preface to the young men of the New Age to restore the Muses to their rank as Daughters of Inspiration from that of Daughters of Memory, to which they had been degraded by the Greeks and Romans and by Milton himself. Many years later

Blake

Blake spoke to Crabb Robinson of Milton "as being at one time a sort of classical Atheist," and in The Marriage of Heaven and Hell he had written

Those who restrain desire, do so because theirs is weak enough to be restrained, and the restrainer or reason usurps its place & governs the unwilling

And being restrain'd, it by degrees becomes passive, till it is only the shadow of desire

The history of this is written in Paradise Lost, & the Governor or Reason is call'd Messiah

And the original Archangel, or possessor of the command of the heavenly host, is call'd the Devil or Satan, and his children are call'd Sin & Death But in Milton, the Father is Destiny, the Son a Ratio of the five senses, & the Holy-ghost Vacuum!

Yet Blake's fundamental sympathy with Milton is characteristically expressed in the note to this section

The reason Milton wrote in fetters when he wrote of Angels & God, and at liberty when of Devils & Hell, is because he was a true Poet and of the Devil's party without knowing it

The theme of the poem is a particular instance of a Last Judgment, the recognition of error, and consequent redemption The hero is Milton, whom Blake had always admired beyond all other poets "Milton lov'd me in childhood & show'd his face" Milton is "unhappy tho' in heav'n" because he remembers his errors while on earth He recognizes that he had been divided against himself, allowing himself to be dominated by his spectre, reason, and that one of the results had been his unsatisfactory emotional relations with his wives and daughters, his "sixfold emanation" Moved by the story of the quarrel between Blake and Hayley and its causes, he determines to return in spirit to earth

And Milton said "I go to Eternal Death! The Nations still Follow after the detestable Gods of Priam, in pomp
Of warlike selfhood contradicting and blaspheming
When will the Resurrection come to deliver the sleeping body From corruptibility? O when, Lord Jesus, wilt thou come?
Tarry no longer, for my soul lies at the gates of death
I will arise and look forth for the morning of the grave
I will go down to the sepulchre to see if morning breaks
I will go down to self annihilation and eternal death, Lest the Last Judgment come & find me unannihilate
And I be seiz'd & giv'n into the hands of my own Selfhood

Passing

Passing through Beulah he enters into his own shadow, leaving "His real and immortal Self as One sleeping on a couch of gold," and he sees the eternal man in the death of the life to which he is himself returning.

First Milton saw Albion upon the Rock of Ages,
Deadly pale outstretch'd and snowy cold, storm cover'd,
A Giant form of perfect beauty outstretch'd on the rock
In solemn death the Sea of Time & Space thunder'd aloud Against the rock, which was unwrapped with the weeds of death

His spirit enters into Blake, who is enabled by his sympathetic communion to follow the experience of Milton on his return to earth. Milton, who in Eternity had known the fourfold vision, the Human, now realizes that though as a poet in his former existence he had possessed the threefold vision of Beulah, he had failed to annihilate his selfhood, and hence the errors in his relations to his wives and daughters. The Zoas, who, as in Vala, have been striving and intriguing among themselves for dominion, instead of fulfilling their own functions, are disturbed by the return of the "immortal Man," and "the Shadowy Female," who may here be best interpreted as the spirit of the age, distracted by the terrors of revolution, expresses her alarm

"I will lament over Milton in the lamentations of the afflicted
My Garments shall be woven of sighs & heart broken lamentations
The misery of unhappy Families shall be drawn out into its border, Wrought with the needle with dire sufferings, poverty, pain & woe
Along the rocky Island & thence throughout the whole Earth,
There shall be the sick Father & his starving Family, there
The Prisoner in the Stone Dungeon & the Slave at the Mill
I will have writings written all over it in Human Words
That every Infant that is born upon the Earth shall read
And get by rote as a hard task of a life of sixty years
I will have Kings inwoven upon it & Councillors & Mighty Men
The Famine shall clasp it together with buckles & Clasps,
And the Pestilence shall be its fringe & the War its girdle,
To divide into Rahab & Tizrah that Milton may come to our tents
For I will put on the Human Form & take the Image of God, Even Pity & Humanity, but my Clothing shall be Cruelty
And I will put on Holiness as a breastplate & as a helmet,
And all my ornaments shall be of the gold of broken hearts,
And the precious stones of anxiety & care & desperation & death
And repentance for sin & sorrow & punishment & fear,
To defend me from thy terrors, O Orc! my only beloved!"

Milton's

Milton's spirit goes toward the "Universe of Los and Emtharmon," poetry and inspiration, but he is obstructed by Urizen. His "Redeemed portion," "the Reasoning Negative," tries to form a philosophy, while still within that portion

His real Human walk'd above in power and majesty, Tho' darken'd, and the Seven Angels of the Presence attended him

He resists the temptation to return to the world of generation and division to which he is enticed by promises of intellectual kingship. But since Milton's spectre is not yet united to his Emanation, he is absorbed by abstract reasoning and seeks God "beyond the skies," instead of seeing through "Fourfold vision" that everything is holy Seest thou the little winged fly, smaller than a grain of sand?

It has a heart like thee, a brain open to heaven & hell, Withinside wondrous & expansive its gates are not clos'd
I hope thine are not hence it clothes itself in rich array
Hence thou art cloth'd with human beauty, O thou mortal man

The Eternals are wrath at Milton's spiritual error and force the Seven Eyes of God and the "Shadowy Eighth," Milton's own essential individuality, who are guarding the Golden Couch in Beulah, to follow him into space and time. The Spirit of Milton enables Blake to see anew the beauty of the material world. The spirit shown in the illustration as a star, enters Blake's left foot because he is in the material world, left and right being accredited symbols of the material and the spiritual. Another illustration represents the star entering the right foot of Blake's beloved brother Robert: there is no reference to this in the text, but by it Blake implies that Robert's spirit is giving him aid and sympathy. The inspiration of Milton so invigorates Blake that he becomes one with the Poetic Genius, Los, who takes him to his City of Art, Golgonooza, but they are met at the Gate by two sons of Los, Rintrah, Wrath, and Palamabron, Pity, who resent the entry of Blake both as revolutionist, and as influenced by Milton, whose religion, Puritanism, they regard as the origin of present errors. But Los reassures them, and under his guidance Blake sees the descent of Souls to the material world, and their generation in the regions of Bowlahoola and and Allamanda, the digestive, assimilative, and the nervous, perceptive systems, and the treading of the "Human Grapes" in the wine-press of war Yet all the while, as Blake never wearies of saying, whatever the misery of the world of generation the poor indigent is like the diamond which, tho' cloth'd In rugged covering in the mine, is open all within

And in his hallow'd center holds the heavens of bright eternity

And in the City of Golgonooza

Entharmon and her Daughters take the pleasant charge
To give them to their lovely heavens till the Great Judgment Day

The first book of Milton contains Blake's most precise description of Los in his twofold symbolism as Time and the Poetic Genius

Los is by Mortals nam'd Time, Entharmon is nam'd Space
But they depict him bald & aged who is in eternal youth
All powerful and his looks flourish like the brows of morning
He is the Spirit of Prophecy, the ever apparent Elias Time is the mercy of Eternity, without Time's swiftness,
Which is the swiftest of all things, all were eternal torment
All the Gods of the Kingdoms of Earth labour in Los's Halls
Every one is a fallen Son of the Spirit of Prophecy
He is the Fourth Zoa that stood around the Throne Divine

This is further defined by Los's account of himself as the Guardian of the World Memory

"I am that Shadowy Prophet who Six Thousand Years ago
Fell from my station in the Eternal bosom Six Thousand Years Are finish'd I return! both Time & Space obey my will I in Six Thousand Years walk up and down, for not one Moment
Of Time is lost, nor one Event of Space unpermanent,
But all remain every fabric of Six Thousand Years Remains permanent, tho' on the Earth where Satan Fell and was cut off, all things vanish & are seen no more,
They vanish not from me & mine, we guard them first & last
The generations of men run on in the tide of Time,
But leave their destin'd lineaments permanent for ever & ever "

And by the beautiful description of Time, every moment of which is of equal value with the whole period since the creation of the world

But others of the Sons of Los build Moments & Minutes & Hours And Days & Months & Years & Ages & Periods, wondrous buildings,

And

And every Moment has a Couch of Gold for soft repose, (A Moment equals a pulsation of the artery),
 And between every two Moments stands a Daughter of Beulah
 To feed the Sleepers on their Couches with maternal care
 And every Minute has an azure Tent with silken Veils
 And every Hour has a bright golden Gate carved with skill
 And every Day & Night has Walls of brass & Gates of adamant, Shining like precious Stones & ornamented with appropriate signs
 And every Month a silver paved Terrace builded high
 And every Year invulnerable Barriers with high Towers
 And every Age is Moated deep with Bridges of silver & gold,
 And every Seven Ages is Incircled with a Flaming Fire
 Now Seven Ages is amounting to Two Hundred Years
 Each has its Guard, each Moment, Minute, Hour, Day, Month & Year

All are the work of Fairy hands of the Four Elements
 The Guard are Angels of Providence on duty evermore
 Every Time less than a pulsation of the artery
 Is equal in its period & value to Six Thousand Years,
 For in this Period the Poet's Work is Done, & all the Great Events of Time start forth & are conceiv'd in such a Period, Within a Moment, a Pulsation of the Artery

The second book opens with a description of Beulah, "a place where Contrarieties are equally true" and where "no dispute can come." It was created that the emanations might have repose while their spectres are in the World of Generation. In their divided state they are too feeble to face the mental war and "Fury of Poetic Inspiration" in Eternity itself.

Olohon, Milton's Emanation, whom he sought, at first described as "a sweet River of Milk & liquid pearl," but later as "a Virgin of twelve years," had already bewailed Milton's return to earth and had been moved to follow him. She now descends. Meanwhile the sleeping Milton, "His real and immortal Self," converses in dream and vision with his Guardians, the Seven Angels of the Presence, and in this dialogue the distinction between states and the individuals who pass through them is explained, between the Identity, the Poetic Genius, the Imagination, which is Eternal, and the Selfhood which has been created and must be annihilated.

One of the illustrations shows Blake's cottage at Felp-ham and the descent of Olohon.

Walking in my Cottage Garden, sudden I beheld

The

The Virgin Ololon & address'd her as a Daughter of Beulah
 "Virgin of Providence, fear not to enter into my Cottage
 What is thy message to thy friend? What am I now to do?
 Is it again to plunge into deeper affliction? behold me
 Ready to obey, but pity thou my Shadow of Delight Enter my Cottage, comfort her, for she is sick with fatigue "

The Virgin answer'd "Knowest thou of Milton who descended Driven from Eternity? him I seek terrified at my Act In Great Eternity which thou knowest I come him to seek "

Immediately Milton's shadow appears, "clothed in black, severe & silent he descended " Blake, inspired by Ololon, now recognizes fully the errors of Milton's religious thought, and its connections with other false religions and morality, which are all a Tabernacle for Satan and a covering for him to do his Will Milton himself, although he has not yet perceived the presence of his Emanation, frees himself from the domination of his Spectre, declaring that he will put off

In Self annihilation all that is not of God alone

Satan, Reason as Error, makes another attempt to conquer his soul,

Saying "I am God the judge of all, the living & the dead Fall therefore down & worship me, submit thy supreme Dictate to my eternal Will, & to my dictate bow
 I hold the Balances of Right & Just & mine the Sword Seven Angels bear my Name & in those Seven I appear,
 But I alone am God & I alone in Heav'n & Earth
 Of all that live dare utter this, others tremble & bow,
 Till All Things become One Great Satan, in Holiness Oppos'd to Mercy, and the Divine Delusion, Jesus, be no more "

Then the Starry Seven, whose name Satan has taken in vain, appear in a column of fire, and call on the Eternal Man to waken

"Awake, Albion awake! reclaim thy Reasoning Spectre Subdue Him to the Divine Mercy Cast him down into the Lake
 Of Los that ever burneth with fire ever & ever, Amen!
 Let the Four Zoas awake from Slumbers of Six Thousand Years "

Milton can now perceive Ololon, who questions him, fearing that the error he has cast out may but give rise to new errors, and he replies

Obey thou the Words of the Inspired Man

All that can be annihilated must be annihilated
 That the Children of Jerusalem may be saved from slavery
 There is a Negation, & there is a Contrary
 The Negation must be destroy'd to redeem the Contraries
 The Negation is the Spectre, the Reasoning Power in Man
 This is a false Body, in Incrustation over my Immortal Spirit, a Selfhood which must be put off & annihilated away
 To cleanse the Face of my Spirit by Self-examination, To bathe in the Waters of Life, to wash off the Not Human,
 I come in Self-annihilation & the grandeur of Inspiration,
 To cast off Rational Demonstration by Faith in the Saviour,
 To cast off the rotten rags of Memory by Inspiration,
 To cast off Bacon, Locke & Newton from Albion's covering,
 To take off his filthy garments & clothe him with Imagination,
 To cast aside from Poetry all that is not Inspiration,
 That it no longer shall dare to mock with the aspersion of Madness,
 Cast on the Inspired by the tame high finisher of paltry Blots Indefinite, or paltry Rhymes, or paltry Harmonies,
 Who creeps into State Government like a caterpillar to destroy,
 To cast off the idiot Questioner who is always questioning
 But never capable of answering, who sits with a sly grin Silent plotting when to question, like a thief in a cave,
 Who publishes doubt & calls it knowledge, whose Science is Despair, Whose pretence to knowledge is Envy, whose whole Science is To destroy the wisdom of ages to gratify ravenous Envy
 That rages round him like a Wolf day & night without rest
 He smiles with condescension, he talks of Benevolence & Virtue,
 And those who act with Benevolence & Virtue they murder time on time

These are the destroyers of Jerusalem, these are the murderers
 Of Jesus, who deny the Faith & mock at Eternal Life,
 Who pretend to Poetry that they may destroy Imagination
 By imitation of Nature's Images drawn from Remembrance
 These are the Sexual Garments, the Abomination of Desolation, Hiding the Human Lineaments as with an Ark & Curtains
 Which Jesus rent & now shall wholly purge away with Fire Till Generation is swallow'd up in Regeneration "

Then Ololon recognizes that

"Altho' our Human Power can sustain the severe contentions Of Friendship, our Sexual cannot," and sacrificing her selfhood she is united with Milton's shadow Their union is followed by that of the Starry Eight as "One Man, Jesus the Saviour" Milton, "the Shadowy Eighth," is now united with Jesus who is God

But the Last Judgment and redemption of Milton are only a prelude of what is to come

Jesus wept & walked forth
 From Felpham's Vale clothed in Clouds of blood, to enter into Albion's Bosom, the bosom of death, & the Four surrounded him In the Column of Fire in Felpham's Vale, then to their mouths the Four
 Applied their Four Trumpets & them sounded to the Four winds

Terror struck in the Vale I stood at that immortal sound
 My bones trembled, I fell outstretch'd upon the path
 A moment, & my Soul return'd into its mortal state,
 To Resurrection & Judgment in the Vegetable Body,
 And my sweet Shadow of Delight stood trembling by my side

Immediately the Lark mounted with a loud trill from Felpham's Vale,
 And the Wild Thyme from Wimbleton's green & impurpled Hills

The revelation through Blake of Milton's error, which has been the error of the Created World, has prepared the way for "the Great Harvest & Vintage of the Nations "

Milton is the most personal of the symbolic books, and contains some of the finest of Blake's later poetry, splendid rhetoric, and unforgettable phrases The vitality of the text is equalled by that of the illustrations

The spirit said to him "Blake be an artist and nothing else In this there is felicity"

But Los hid Emitharmon from the sight of all these things
Upon the Thames whose lulling harmony repos'd her soul

IN other words the Blakes came back to London and lodged at 17 South Molton Street, where Mrs Blake gradually recovered health. On 26th October 1803 Blake writes to Hayley "My wife continues poorly, but fancies she is better in health here than by the seaside." The agony of apprehension which she suffered during Blake's absence for his trial at Chichester in the following January brought her very low. "My poor wife has been near the gate of death, as was supposed by our kind and attentive fellow inhabitant, the young and very amiable Mrs Enoch, who gave my wife all the attention that a daughter could pay to a mother, but my arrival dispelled the formidable malady, and my dear and good woman again begins to resume her health and strength."

She was treated by a surgeon, John Birch, who was also a friend of Mr Butts, and is mentioned in Blake's letters to him of 11th September 1801 and 25th April 1803, and on 23rd October Blake says "She is surprisingly recovered. Electricity is the wonderful cause, the swelling of her legs and knees is entirely reduced. She is very near as free from rheumatism as she was five years ago, and we have the greatest confidence in her perfect recovery." This hope seems to have been realized, as he wrote again on 18th December "My wife continues well, thanks to Mr Birch's Electrical Magic, which she has discontinued these three months."

The only description of the Blakes' home in South Molton Street known to me is given in a note in the London Library copy of Redgrave's A Century of Painters by

by Martin Cregan, afterwards President of the Royal Hibernian Academy, who visited them in 1809 "I had the felicity of seeing this happy pair in their one apartment in South Molton Street The Bed on one side and picture of Alfred and the Danes on the wall" Blake was exhilarated by his return to London, as he had been at first by the change of surroundings at Felpham

The shops in London improve, everything is elegant, clean, and neat, the streets are widened where they were narrow, even Snow Hill is become almost level, and is a very handsome street, and the narrow part of the Strand near St Clement's is widened and become very elegant

In a letter to Hayley of 7th October 1803 he writes some say that Happiness is not Good for Mortals, and they ought to be answered that Sorrow is not fit for Immortals and is utterly useless to any one, a blight never does good to a tree, and if a blight kill not a tree but it still bear fruit, let none say that the fruit was in consequence of the blight

After his return from the trial Blake wrote "Hope earnestly that you have escaped the brush of my Evil Star, which I believe is now for ever fallen into the abyss" His belief in Hayley's power of understanding the spiritual conflicts he had endured would be amazing were it not more probable that the need for self expression had blurred the image of his correspondent His letter of 23rd October 1804 celebrates his deliverance

For now! O Glory! and O Delight! I have entirely reduced that spectrous fiend to his station, whose annoyance has been the ruin of my labours for the last passed twenty years of my life He is the enemy of conjugal love and is the Jupiter of the Greeks, an iron-hearted tyrant, the ruler of ancient Greece I speak with perfect confidence and certainty of the fact which has passed upon me Nebuchadnezzar had seven times passed over him, I have had twenty, thank God I was not altogether a beast as he was, but I was a slave bound in a mill among beasts and devils, these beasts and these devils are now, together with myself, become children of light and liberty, and my feet and my wife's feet are free from fetters O lovely Felpham, parent of Immortal Friendship, to thee I am eternally indebted for my three years' rest from perturbation and the strength I now enjoy Suddenly, on the day after visiting the Truchsessian Gallery of pictures, I was again enlightened with the light I enjoyed in my youth, and which has for exactly twenty years been closed from me as by a door and by window-shutters Consequently I can, with confidence, promise you ocular demonstration of my altered state on the plates I am now engraving

after Romney, whose spiritual aid has not a little conduced to my restoration to the light of Art O the distress I have undergone, and my poor wife with me, incessantly labouring and incessantly spoiling what I had done well Every one of my friends was astonished at my faults, and could not assign a reason, they knew my industry and abstinence from every pleasure for the sake of study, and yet—and yet—and yet there wanted the proofs of industry in my works I thank God with entire confidence that it shall be so no longer—he is become my servant who domineered over me, he is even as a brother who was my enemy Dear Sir, excuse my enthusiasm or rather madness, for I am really drunk with intellectual vision whenever I take a pencil or graver into my hand, even as I used to be in my youth, and as I have not been for twenty dark, but very profitable, years I thank God that I courageously pursued my course through darkness In a short time I shall make my assertion good that I am become suddenly as I was at first, by producing the Head of Romney and The Shipwreck quite another thing from what you or I ever expected them to be In short, I am now satisfied and proud of my work, which I have not been for the above long period

And again, a few weeks later, in a tantalizing extract from a sale catalogue

I have indeed fought thro' a Hell of terrors and horrors (which none could know but myself) in a divided existence, now no longer divided nor at war with myself, I shall travel on in the strength of the Lord God, as Poor Pilgrim says

Blake had traversed the fourth stage of the Way, the most terrible to him as to all mystics, and had entered on the last, the Unitive Life Poverty and neglect he had still to face, but it would seem that in spite of such crises as that noted in the MS Book "Tuesday, Janry 20, 1807, between Two & Seven in the Evening—Despair," what had been doubt had become faith and certainty, and henceforth the Divine Vision was not long absent from him In writing of the redemption of man in Vala he had redeemed himself, and won spiritual freedom for his divided soul, the devils, the Four Zoas, had become the Children of Light and the servants of Man Los, the Poetic Genius, tortured by doubts and failures, knew again that his name in Eternity was Urthona, Spirit, and that on Earth he had power to build the Palace of Art Blake was beginning to engrave Milton, telling his own story of the struggle to free his genius from those who were corporeal friends but spiritual enemies, and the story of Milton's conquest of spiritual unity, which was also his own own story of an inspired visionary knowledge of the Unitive Life. Moreover, the conception of his last symbolic book, Jerusalem, the epic of spiritual freedom, was already taking shape in his mind.

The conflict between reason and imagination which had beset the mystic was reflected in the divided inspiration of the artist. Of this he had already spoken to Butts in a letter from Felpham, but the flame of his early inspiration suddenly burnt clear after this visit to the Truchsessian Gallery. These pictures were the property of a Count Truchsess, who purported to have lost a large fortune in the French Revolution, and wished to found a company for the purchase of his pictures as the nucleus of a permanent gallery. Farington writes in his Diary, 21st August 1803:

Lawrence had been this morning to see the exhibition of Count Truchsess's pictures near the New road, Marybone. He gave a most unfavourable account of them—saying there was scarcely an original picture of a Great Master among them. There are 1,000 pictures & Lawrence does not think the whole are worth £2,000. The Count values them at £60,000.

The judgment of so famous a collector as Lawrence must be accepted. Blake, who had been recovering his youthful inspiration at Felpham, went to the Gallery with creative eyes: young genius, and Blake's genius never aged, is often stimulated by something of little worth: how many of those prints after old masters by which his imagination had been fired would have been thought worthy by Sir Thomas of a place in his portfolios? Blake speaks of twenty years of darkness which, if taken literally, would carry him back to 1784, but he was apt to deal in round numbers, and doubtless means that the happiness and certainty which produced the Songs of Innocence and the engraving of "Glad Day" have returned to him. Since then he had lived through the contrary state of experience and the dark tumult of Lambeth and Felpham, only broken by the laughter of the Marriage of Heaven and Hell. Mr. Foster Damon, however, does not allow even this approximate accuracy to Blake's "exactly twenty years," reducing the time to less than half by dating it from the completion of Ahania—"Judging by Blake's own works, the the terrible period of sterility had lasted only nine years " But Blake is not speaking of a period of sterility, if indeed the years during which he wrote Vala, and at least conceived the idea of Milton, can fairly be called sterile, on the contrary he calls those years "very profitable" though darkened by conflict and division He respected the process of his own development, however painful that process might have been, and he knew what he had gained by it, even though he was returning to his old ideas his movement was synthetic, though he was furiously casting out what seemed to him error because it was foreign to his own genius He had cautioned Butts against thinking that the pictures he had painted for him were not what he now wished them to be moreover, he did not destroy his "experiment pictures" but exhibited them in 1809

Many of the pictures which belonged to Mr Butts are now in the Graham Robertson Collection "The River of Life," with its clear, radiant colour, is supposed to have been painted after Blake's visit to the Truchsessian Gallery, and "The Four and Twenty Elders casting down their crowns before the Divine Throne," which specially impressed Rodin, was executed in 1805 On the other hand some of those pre-eminently remarkable for invention, such as "The Soldiers Casting Lots for Christ's Garments," or for colour, as "The Death of the Virgin Mary" and its companion picture "The Death of St Joseph," belong to the earlier group Blake, as Mr Russell points out, stands almost alone as a great imaginative painter of figures in water-colour He has, in fact, accomplished a more difficult and a far rarer feat than that of the early imaginative landscape painters in water-colour The originality of his inventions, as, for instance, that of the angels flying downwards on each side of the figure of Christ in "The Ascension," is usually singled out as the main characteristic of his genius The brilliance and subtlety, the opalescence, the iridescence of his colouring at its best is inevitably lost in reproductions Another quality, which is at least easier to detect in the originals, because it is induced by such slight variations in tone, is the sculpturesque, a legacy from those years spent in Westminster Abbey often a group of two or three figures becomes in memory, like
Blake's

Blake's fold of lambs, beautiful sculpture. Some of the pictures painted for Mr Butts are far less successful than others. All Blake's work except, perhaps, the series of colour-printed drawings, is uneven, but it is impossible to divide it into two groups, pre- and post-Truchsessian, as this enthusiastic pronouncement suggests.

In this letter Blake speaks, too, of "the spectrous fiend" as the "enemy of conjugal love," and says that his wife's feet also are now free from fetters. This implies that Mrs Blake's doubts had been added to his own, and even, perhaps, that her sympathy with Hayley may have gone a little further than Blake could have wished. The obvious interpretation—and doubtless Hayley's reading—of his apostrophe to Felpham as "parent of immortal friendship" is that the good-natured Devil had urged him to an exaggerated expression of his feeling for Hayley, but the allusions to his wife suggest a subtler meaning. Blake sometimes uses friendship as the name for love in eternity, and in A Vision of the Last Judgment there is a sentence which recalls what those who knew her toward the end of her life say of Catherine Blake—"Also on the right hand of Noah A Female descends to meet her Lover or Husband, representative of that Love, call'd Friendship, which Looks for no other heaven than their Beloved & in him sees all reflected as in a Glass of Eternal Diamond." Blake may, then, be referring to a more perfect relationship with his wife as one outcome of his spiritual victory. But on the other hand gratitude and the relief from Hayley's presence may have temporarily induced a belief in their immortal friendship, witness the characteristic scrap from a sale catalogue "Reading in the Bible of the Eyes of the Almighty, I could not help putting up a petition for yours."

The rest from perturbation means, of course, the freedom from financial anxiety at Felpham of which he had assured Butts. The peacefulness of Felpham had now become a refreshing memory.

Remembering our happy Christmas at lovely Felpham, our spirits seem still to hover round our sweet cottage and round the beautiful Turret. I have said seem, but am persuaded that distance is nothing but a phantasy. We are often sitting by our cottage fire, and often we think think we hear your voice calling at the gate Surely these things are real and eternal in our eternal mind, and can never pass away

Blake's letters are full of references to the Life of Romney as he was assisting Hayley by collecting material and interviewing various persons concerned This brought him into renewed relations with Flaxman, who was one of the principal persons to be consulted on Hayley's behalf, and he writes "My admiration of Flaxman's genius is more and more—his industry is equal to his other great powers" And again, after the death of Banks, the sculptor, in 1805, "I conceive Flaxman stands without a competitor in sculpture"

An extract from a letter printed in a sale catalogue bearing the date 4th December 1804, has the sentence, 'I have mentioned your proposals to our noble Flaxman, whose high & generous spirit relinquishes the whole to me—but that he will overlook and advise' Blake also alludes to the new edition of Flaxman's Homer, for which he engraved three plates

One of the owners of Romney's pictures upon whom Blake called was Adam Walker, author and inventor, who showed him some family portraits

But above all, a picture of Lear and Cordelia, when he awakes and knows her—an incomparable production, which Mr W bought for five shillings at a broker's shop, it is about five feet by four and exquisite for expression, indeed, it is most pathetic, the heads of Lear and Cordelia can never be surpassed, and Kent and the other attendant are admirable, the picture is very highly finished

Another, Daniel Braithwaite, thought Blake's own engraving of Romney "a very great likeness" This portrait, which Blake mentions several times as acceptable to those who had known Romney, was intended for Hayley's Life, but was not used His only contribution was "The Shipwreck," after a sketch by Romney, for which he took Fittler's illustrations of Falconer's poem, The Shipwreck, as a model

Blake's old partner, James Parker, now apparently very prosperous, was among those whom he consulted about engraving plates for Romney's Life It may be that Blake is comparing his own lot with Parker's in a sentence in a sale catalogue which follows another concerning Romney's ney's Life—"Money flies from me Profit never ventures upon my Threshold, tho' every other man's doorstone is worn down into the very Earth by the footsteps of the fiends of commerce "

Blake was also finishing the plates for Cowper's Life, and wrote on 31st March 1804 to Hayley who was fussing over the non-arrival of the plates

I hope you will believe me when I say that my solicitude to bring them to perfection has caused this delay, as also not being quite sure that you had copies ready for them I could not think of delivering the twelve copies without giving the last touches, which are always the best I remain, in engraver's hurrry, which is the worst and most unprofitable of hurries

Your sincere and affectionate,
WILL BLAKE

When he first went back to London Blake expected to procure work as an engraver without difficulty On 26th October 1803 he wrote to Hayley "I have got to work after Fuseli for a little Shakespeare Mr Johnson, the bookseller, tells me that there 'is no want of work So far you will be rejoiced with me, and your words 'Do not fear you can want employment' were verified the morning after I received your kind letter " The reference is to Alexander Chalmers's edition of Shakespeare's Works, 1805, for which he engraved two plates after Fuseli, "Queen Katherine's Dream" and "Romeo and the Apothecary," receiving £25 for each plate And early in the New Year he says

My dear sir, I wish now to satisfy you that all is in a good train, I am going on briskly with the Plates, find everything promising work in abundance, and, if God blesses me with health, doubt not, yet to make a figure in the great dance of life that shall amuse the spectators • in the sky

He engraved plates for two books by Prince Hoare, painter and dramatist, whose acquaintance he made at this time Hoare had studied in Rome under Mengs with Fuseli in 1776, and became Foreign Secretary of the Royal Academy in 1799 The frontispiece of the Correspondence is "Two Views of a Statue of Ceres" engraved by Blake after Flaxman Blake also engraved the frontispiece for Hoare's An Inquiry into the Requisite Cultivation

tion and Present State of the Arts of Design in England, published in 1806 The subject of this is the "Graphic Muse" sketched from the picture by Sir Joshua Reynolds on the ceiling of the library of the Royal Academy, which has now been transferred to the Council Chamber of Burlington House This is Blake's only known work after Reynolds, and his opinion of his task is not recorded

He exhibits great interest in a scheme for which it is difficult to understand his enthusiasm, except that he doubtless thought it would give Hayley pleasure Richard Phillips, bookseller and editor of the Monthly Magazine, had proposed that Hayley should be responsible for the conduct of a literary enterprise, and Blake was commissioned by Prince Hoare to act as intermediary He endorses a note of Phillips' terms, saying

Knowing your aversion to reviews and reviewing, I consider the present proposal as peculiarly adapted to your ideas It may be call'd a Defence of Literature against those pests of the press, and a bulwark for genius, which shall, with your good assistance, disperse those rebellious spirits of Envy and Malignity In short, if you see it as I see it, you will embrace this proposal on the score of parental duty Literature is your child She calls for your assistance! You, who never refuse to assist any, how remote so ever, will certainly hear her voice

Either because Hayley wished to delegate some of his duties or for another cause the scheme fell through

Blake's courteous and easy references to money matters mark his friendly relations with Hayley

Now, My Dear Sir, I will thank you for the transmission of ten Pounds to the Dreamer over his own Fortunes for I certainly am that Dreamer, but tho' I dream over my own Fortunes, I ought not to Dream over those of other Men, & accordingly have given a look over my account Book, in which I have regularly written down Every Sum I have reciev'd from you, & tho' I never can balance the account of obligations with you, I ought to do my best at all times & in all circumstances I find that you was right in supposing that I had been paid for all I have done, but when I wrote last requesting ten pounds, I thought it was Due on the Shipwreck (which it was), but I did not advert to the Twelve Guineas which you Lent Me when I made up 30 Pounds to pay our worthy Seagrave in part of his Account I am therefore that 12 Guineas in your Debt Which If I had consider'd, I should have used more consideration & more ceremony also, in so serious an affair as the calling on you for more Money, but, however, your kind answer to my Request makes me Doubly Thank you

Before Blake had been back in London for a year he

found that, however much the appearance of the town had improved, human nature was the same, and he exposes to Hayley the attempts of Johnson and Phillips to decry the work of the Chichester printer, Seagrave, whom Hayley had employed, in their own interests, adding

I could not avoid saying thus much in justice to our good Seagrave, whose replies to Mr Johnson's aggravating letters have been represented to Mr Rose in an unfair light, as I have no doubt, because Mr Johnson has, at times, written such letters to me as would have called for the sceptre of Agamemnon rather than the tongue of Ulysses, and I will venture to give it as my settled opinion that if you suffer yourself to be persuaded to print in London you will be cheated every way, but, however, as some little excuse, I must say that in London every calumny and falsehood utter'd against another of the same trade is thought fair play Engravers, Painters, Statuaries, Printers, Poets, we are not in a field of battle, but in a City of Assassinations This makes your lot truly enviable, and the country is not only more beautiful on account of its expanded meadows, but also on account of its benevolent minds

The fashionable enthusiasm of the moment appealed to him as little as the self-interested commercialism of Johnson, Phillips & Co Few memoirs or essays of this time can be without their references, favourable or adverse, to that well-advertised phenomenon, the actor Betty, who did not fulfil his boyhood's promise Here is Blake's comment

The town is mad young Roscius, like all prodigies, is the talk of everyone I have not seen him, and perhaps never may I have no curiosity to see him, as I well know what is within compass of a boy of fourteen, and as to real acting, it is, like historical painting, no boy's work

Toward another infant prodigy he shows more sympathy In 1806 Dr Benjamin Heath Malkin, head master of Bury Grammar School, and author of Scenery, Antiquities, and Biography of South Wales and other works, published an account of the precocious little Thomas Malkin, who died in 1802, in his seventh year Reference has already been made to Dr Malkin's account of Blake in the dedicatory epistle to Johnes of Haford, translator of Froissart, which serves as introduction to A Father's Memoirs of his Child Dr Malkin supports his own view of the originality of his little boy's drawings by adding

Blake's testimony Blake praises the "firm, determinate outline," and concludes "All his efforts prove this little boy to have had that greatest of all blessings, a strong imagination, a clear idea, and a determinate vision of things in his own mind"

One of Thomas' productions was a Map of Allestone, an imaginary country, with places named Bubblebob, Punchpeach, Le Grassebank, and so forth, of which he also wrote the history Blake may have known little Thomas before he went to Felpham in 1800, and encouraged him in the creation of a mythical region, but it is more likely that Cromek introduced him to Dr Malkin in 1805 The frontispiece of the Memoir has a portrait of the child after a miniature by Paye, surrounded by a design after Blake which represents an angel conducting the child heavenward, he takes leave of his mother, who is kneeling on the edge of a cliff The objects lying beside her may have been suggested to Blake by a passage in one of the child's own letters "Also, I think my Pocket-Book, is a very nice thing, especially, for in it, there is a tweasers, bodkin, scissors, and a knife to cut with, pencil to write memorandums with upon the asses skin, and there is a clasp to it on the outside to open and shut the pocket-book with" Gilchrist states that the design was originally engraved by Blake himself, but was re-engraved by Cromek The reviewers were not attracted by the specimens of Blake's poetry quoted by Dr Malkin in the Monthly Review for October 1806 he is described as "certainly very inferior to Dr Watts," while the writer in the Monthly Magazine of January 1807 considers that "the poetry of Mr Blake inserted in the dedication, does not rise above mediocrity, as an artist he appears to more advantage" The variant of the last line of the third verse of "The Tyger" "What dread hand forged thy dread feet?" for "What dread hand? & what dread feet?" is interesting because Malkin had derived his information direct from Blake

The only letters of Blake's which have been preserved from the time of his return to London till the end of 1805 are addressed to Hayley, and are chiefly concerned with Hayley's work and his own They contain a few allusions to books the précis in a sale catalogue of a letter of 16th July 1804 has "Speaks in high praise of Mrs Klopstock's Letters and says that Richardson has won his heart" His reference to a Life of Washington which he is sending on to Hayley suggests that his enthusiasm for the American Revolution is on the wane Did he see Urizen's Prohibition, one law for the lion and the ass, approaching to condemn his shadowy pint of porter?

I suppose an American would tell me that Washington did all that was done before he was born, as the French now adore Buonaparte and the English our poor George, so the Americans will consider Washington as their God This is only Grecian, or rather Trojan, worship, and perhaps will be revised (?) in an age or two In the meantime I have the happiness of seeing the Divine Countenance in such men as Cowper and Milton more distinctly than in any prince or hero

Blake's two last letters to Hayley are reserved for later quotation, as they introduce his successor, an employer who better deserved the name of Satan than the well-intentioned Bard Although no further letters have come to light Blake's lines "On H— The Pick Thank"

I write the Rascal Thanks till he & I
With Thanks & Compliments are quite drawn dry, show that the correspondence continued for some years, since this and his other epigrams on Hayley are in the section of the Rossetti MS ascribed to circa 1808-1811 Some critics have spoken of these epigrams as though Blake, after signing one of his affectionate letters of 1803-1805, had opened his MS book and then and there scribbled lines of a grossly opposite character This is inaccurate and misleading The breach with Hayley gradually widened until all and more than all the Felpham bitterness revived and overflowed in lines which, be it remembered, were never intended for publication It is clear from Blake's letters that he was expecting a considerable share in engraving the plates for Romney's Life, his position as Hayley's agent in collecting material for illustrations also gives colour to such an expectation and yet he is only represented by one plate, that of "The Shipwreck" The portrait to which reference has been made was discarded, and none of the other illustrations

was allotted to him In a letter of 27th April 1804 he says "Engraving is of so slow process, I must beg of you to give me the earliest possible notice of what engraving is to be done for the Life of Romney" On 4th May of the same year he writes "Mr Flaxman agrees with me that somewhat more than outline is necessary to the execution of Romney's designs, because his merit is eminent in the art of massing his lights and shades I should propose to etch them in a rapid but firm manner, somewhat, perhaps, as I did the Head of Euler" He discusses the same subject in the letter of 22nd June, supporting his own opinion by that of Parker and Flaxman, though it would appear that, at any rate by that date, Blake did not look forward to undertaking all the work for the Life himself

The proposals referred to in Blake's letter of December 1804 may be assumed to refer to the life of Romney, and it was probably suggested that he should engrave a certain number of plates, possibly those afterwards allotted to Caroline Watson, under Flaxman's supervision They cannot refer to a book which was later under consideration for the benefit of Councillor Rose's widow, as Blake's letter about his death is dated 20th December of this year A letter of Flaxman's of 12th August 1805 relates to this suggestion, which apparently came to nothing, at any rate so far as Blake was concerned He offers to give five drawings of his own, adding concerning the Edward the first, I have seen two or three noble sketches by Blake which might be drawn in outline by him in a manner highly creditable to your book & I would overlook them so far as to see that they would be suitable to the other designs

Later in the same letter he says the day after I recieved your last letter Blake brought a present of two copies of the Songs, it is a beautiful work, Nancy and I are equally thankful for this present, and equally delighted with your bounty to the Poet-Artist

This letter shows that while Flaxman was a genuine admirer of Blake's powers he considered that his engraving was too individual in character to combine easily with work by other hands, but it was not his doing that Hayley employed employed Caroline Watson instead of Blake as he had expressed a poor opinion of her work as far back as 18th June 1804. In the same letter he recommended Cromek as an alternative, mentioning, "The Shipwreck" as a specially suitable subject for him, but it is fair to assume that he did not at that time know that Blake was engraving "The Shipwreck," and on the 18th December Blake reports to Hayley that Flaxman approves much of his plate. Hayley's first transference of work from Blake to Caroline Watson was the substitution in the octavo edition of 1805 of the Life of Cowper of her engraving after Romney's drawing of Cowper for Blake's, which had appeared in the first edition. Blake, it would seem, did not know of her engraving till April 1805, and it is not clear that he was then informed that it was to be used in the new edition. His courteous comment is "The idea of seeing an engraving of Cowper by the hand of Caroline Watson is, I assure you, a pleasing one to me. It will be highly gratifying to see another copy by another hand, and not only gratifying, but improving, which is much better."

The Life of Romney was published in 1809. Most of the plates were executed by Caroline Watson, who assumed the rôle of engraver in chief originally intended for and expected by Blake. There is, however, no evidence of an actual breach of agreement, nor can it be determined at what point Blake realized that he had been finally ousted. It is possible that the fresh venture on which he was embarking was considered by Hayley and his adviser, Flaxman, as a sufficient excuse for ignoring the indefinite arrangement with him.

There are no private letters for 1806 or 1807, but in June of the former year a letter to Richard Phillips, as Editor, appeared in the Monthly Magazine protesting against a criticism in Bell's Weekly Messenger of Fuseli's Count Ugolino, exhibited at the Royal Academy, in which the treatment of the subject and also the colouring had been censured. After a vigorous defence of both Blake concluded:

A gentleman who visited me the other day, said, "I am very much surprised at the dislike that some connoisseurs show on viewing the pictures of Mr. Fuseli, but the truth is, he is a hundred years beyond the present generation " Though I am startled at such an assertion, I hope the contemporary taste will shorten the hundred years into as many hours, for I am sure that any person consulting his own eyes must prefer what is so supereminent, and I am as sure that any person consulting his own reputation, or the reputation of his country, will refrain from disgracing either by such ill-judged criticism again

On 14th October 1807 Blake addressed another letter to Phillips, both as Editor and as Sheriff, demanding an enquiry into the alleged imprisonment of an astrologer "We are all subject to Error", writes Blake "Who shall say, Except the Natural Religionists, that we are not all subject to Crime?" This letter was not published

Flaxman first informed Hayley of Blake's new prospects in a letter of 18th October 1805

Mr Cromeck has employed Blake to make a set of forty drawings from Blair's poem of The Grave, twenty of which he proposes to have engraved by the designer and to publish them, with the hope of rendering service to the artist Several members of the Royal Academy have been highly pleased with the specimens, and mean to encourage the work I have seen several compositions, the most striking are "The Gambols of Ghosts according with their affections previous to the final Judgment", "A Widow embracing the turf which covers her Husband's Grave", "Wicked Strong Man Dying", "The Good Old Man's Soul received by Angels"

In a later letter he added the acrimonious comment

you will be glad to hear that Blake has his hands full of work for a considerable time to come, and if he will only condescend to give that attention to his worldly concerns which everyone does that prefers living to starving, he is now in a way to do well

Cromeck is the engraver already mentioned whom Flaxman had recommended to Hayley in connection with Romney's Life He was a pupil of Bartolozzi's, and had engraved many book illustrations after Stothard, but was now trying partly, it would appear, on account of indifferent health, to set up for himself as a publisher of engravings and illustrated books He must be credited with a certain measure of artistic discernment as well as with commercial acumen of a less creditable kind.

Blake himself announces his undertaking in a letter to Hayley dated 27th November 1805

Mr Cromeck the Engraver came to me desiring to have some of my

my Designs, he named his Price & wish'd me to Produce him Illustrations of The Grave, A Poem by Robert Blair, in consequence of this I produced about twenty Designs which pleas'd so well that he, with the same liberality with which he set me about the Drawing, has now set me to Engrave them

Blake's reply to Hayley's congratulations, which closes the surviving correspondence between them, shows that he expected to be delivered from pecuniary anxiety by the arrangement with Cromek

I cannot omit to Return you my sincere & Grateful Acknowledgments for the kind Reception you have given my New Projected Work It bids fair to set me above the difficulties I have hitherto encountered, But my Fate has been so uncommon that I expect Nothing I was alive and in health and with the same Talents I now have all the time of Boydell's, Machlin's, Bowyer's, & other great works I was known to them and was look'd upon by them as Incapable of Employment in those Works, it may turn out so again, notwithstanding appearances

It appears from the first of these letters, as also from Flaxman's account, that Cromek had definitely commissioned Blake to make designs from Blair's Grave Gilchrist's statement, supported by J T Smith, that he had already made some drawings, intending to engrave and publish them himself, may therefore be erroneous The letter of 27th November, and this is a more important point, confirms J T Smith's statement that the drawings were sold to Cromek on the express understanding that Blake was to engrave them himself, though Cromek's prospectus, to which Gilchrist refers, announcing that the engravings were to be from Blake's own hand, has disappeared Cromek purchased twelve instead of twenty of Blake's designs for the sum of twenty guineas, and breaking his contract with Blake, handed them over to Schiavonetti, a second-rate engraver, who had been a fellow pupil of his under Bartolozzi Blake, according to Gilchrist, had actually engraved one or two plates, and he obviously expected to derive his profit mainly from engraving, as the price of a single plate would have exceeded that of the whole set of drawings After his designs had been transferred to Schiavonetti he offered Cromek an exquisite drawing intended to accompany the lines in which he had dedicated his illustrations to the Queen, at £4 4s, a price a price higher than he had charged for the others on the understanding that he should be their engraver Cromek's reception of this moderate proposal is both mean and insolent

'64, Newman Street May 1807

MR BLAKE—SIR, I received not without great surprise, your letter demanding four guineas for the sketched vignette dedicated to the Queen I have returned the drawing with this note, and I will briefly state my reasons for so doing In the first place I do not think it merits the price you affix to it, under any circumstances In the next place I never had the remotest suspicion that you could for a moment entertain the idea of writing me to supply money to create an honour in which I cannot possibly participate The Queen allowed you, not me, to dedicate the work to her! The honour would have been yours exclusively, but that you might not be deprived of any advantage likely to contribute to your reputation, I was willing to pay Mr Schiavonetti ten guineas for etching a plate from the drawing in question

Another reason for returning the sketch is that I can do without it, having already engaged to give a greater number of etchings than the price of the book will warrant, and I neither have nor ever had any encouragement from you to place you before the public in a more favourable point of view than that which I have already chosen You charge me with imposing upon you Upon my honour I have no recollection of anything of the kind If the world and I were to settle accounts to-morrow, I do assure you the balance would be considerably in my favour In this respect "I am more sinned against than sinning" But, if I cannot recollect any instance wherein I have imposed upon you, several present themselves in which I have imposed upon myself Take two or three that press upon me

When I first called on you, I found you without reputation, I imposed on myself the labour, and an Herculean one it has been, to create and establish a reputation for you I say the labour was Herculean, because I had not only to contend with, but I had to battle with a man who had predetermined not to be served What public reputation you have, the reputation of eccentricity excepted, I have acquired for you, and I can honestly and conscientiously assert that if you had laboured thro' life for yourself as zealously and as earnestly as I have done for you your reputation as an artist would not only have been enviable but it would have put it out of the power of an individual as obscure as myself, either to add to or to take from it I also imposed on myself when I believed what you have so often told me, that your works were equal, nay superior, to a Raphael or to a Michael Angelo! Unfortunately for me as a publisher the public awoke me from this state of stupor, this mental delusion That public is willing to give you credit for what real talent is to be found in your productions, and for no more

I have imposed on myself yet more grossly in believing you to be one altogether abstracted from this world, holding converse with the world of spirits!—simple, unoffending, a combination of the serpent and

and the dove I really blush when I reflect how I have been cheated in this respect. The most effectual way of benefiting a designer whose aim is general patronage, is to bring his designs before the public, through the medium of engraving. Your drawings have had the good fortune to be engraved by one of the first artists in Europe, and the specimens already shown have already produced you orders that I verily believe you otherwise would not have received. Herein I have been gratified, for I was determined to bring you food as well as reputation, tho' from your late conduct I have some reason to embrace your wild opinion, that to manage genius, and to cause it to produce good things, it is absolutely necessary to starve it, indeed, this opinion is considerably heightened by the recollection that your best work, the illustrations of "The Grave", was produced when you and Mrs. Blake were reduced so low as to be obliged to live on half-a-guinea a week.

Before I conclude this letter, it will be necessary to remark, when I gave you the order for the drawings from the poem of "The Grave", I paid you for them more than I could then afford, more in proportion that you were in the habit of receiving, and what you were perfectly satisfied with, though, I must do you the justice to confess much less than I think is their real value. Perhaps you have friends and admirers who can appreciate their merit and worth as much as I do. I am decidedly of opinion that the twelve for "The Grave" should sell at the least for sixty guineas. If you can meet with any gentleman who will give you this sum for them, I will deliver them into his hands on the publication of the poem. I will deduct the twenty guineas I have paid you for that sum, and the remainder forty ditto shall be at your disposal.

The book was published in 1808, and was issued to 589 subscribers at 2½ guineas, some proof copies being priced at 4 guineas. Cromek announces in his Advertisement that he had submitted the drawings before they were engraved to eleven members of the Royal Academy, including West, the President, Flaxman, and Lawrence. The dull little introduction is by Fuseli, and the descriptions of the plates probably by Cromek himself. The frontispiece is an engraving of Blake by Schiavonetti after the portrait by T. Phillips, R.A., now in the National Portrait Gallery. A comparison between this painting and the life mask in the same gallery suggests that Phillips has softened, weakened, and conventionalized Blake's head as much as Schiavonetti has softened, weakened, and conventionalized his designs. Allan Cunningham, in The Cabinet Gallery of Pictures, tells an anecdote about this picture, which, like others in Cunningham's version of the Blake legend, suggests embellishment.

Blake

Blake, who always saw in fancy every form he drew, believed that angels descended to painters of old, and sat for their portraits. When he himself sat to Phillips for that fine portrait so beautifully engraved by Schiavonetti, the painter, in order to obtain the most unaffected attitude, and the most poetic expression, engaged his sitter in a conversation concerning the sublime in art. "We hear much," said Phillips, "of the grandeur of Michael Angelo, from the engravings I should say he has been over-rated, he could not paint an angel so well as Raphael." "He has not been over-rated, Sir," said Blake, "and he could paint an angel better than Raphael." "Well, but," said the other, "you never saw any of the paintings of Michael Angelo, and perhaps speak from the opinions of others, your friends may have deceived you." "I never saw any of the paintings of Michael Angelo," replied Blake, "but I speak from the opinion of a friend who could not be mistaken." "A valuable friend truly," said Phillips, "and who may he be I pray?" "The arch-angel Gabriel, Sir," answered Blake. "A good authority surely, but you know evil spirits love to assume the looks of good ones, and this may have been done to mislead you." "Well now, Sir," said Blake, "this is really singular, such were my own suspicions, but they were soon removed—I will tell you how. I was one day reading Young's Night Thoughts, and when I came to that passage which asks 'who can paint an angel', I closed the book and cried, 'Aye! who can paint an angel?' A voice in the room answered, 'Michael Angelo could.' 'And how do you know,' I said, looking round me, but I saw nothing save a greater light than usual. 'I know,' said the voice, 'for I sat to him, I am the arch-angel Gabriel.' 'Oho!' I answered, 'You are, are you, you may be an evil spirit—there are such in the land.' 'You shall have good assurance,' said the voice, 'can an evil spirit do this?' I looked when the voice came, and was then aware of a shining shape, with bright wings, who diffused much light. As I looked, the shape dilated more and more. He waved his hands, the roof of my study opened, he ascended into heaven, he stood in the sun, and beckoning to me, moved the universe. An angel of evil could not have done that—it was the arch-angel Gabriel." The painter marvelled much at this wild story, but he caught from Blake's looks, as he related it, that rapt poetic expression which has rendered his portrait one of the finest of the English school.

Fate, it would seem, took a malignant revenge on Blake for his disbelief in the reality of time, she never secured him ease or even a modest measure of prosperity. She made him wait for his due share of fame. And now when, through the publication of his series of designs for Blair's Grave, he made his first and only appeal to a contemporary public wider than the little group of his fellow artists and admirers, his work was dishonoured, his true art depressed, by inadequate interpretation. Possibly Cromek was wise in his generation and a larger public was then only able to assimilate Blake diluted by Schiavonetti, but he is none the less guilty not only of cheating Blake, but of defrauding the world of the setting which befitted his jewel

Although the Blair designs were Blake's only work with any pretensions to popularity in his own day, they were too imaginative to be wholly acceptable Cunningham, who himself awards them tepid praise, says that "The frontispiece—a naked Angel descending headlong and rousing the Dead with the sound of the last Trumpet—alarmed the devout people of the North, and made maids and matrons retire behind their fans" Crabb Robinson was disturbed because Blake's "greatest enjoyment consists in giving bodily form to spiritual beings" He mentions the engravings which represent the soul as hovering over the body or uniting with it as "about the most offensive of his inventions"

Robert Hunt, in the Examiner, agrees with Crabb Robinson in admiring the "Death of the Wicked Man," but considers that "nearly all the allegory is not only far-fetched but absurd, inasmuch as a human body can never be mistaken in a picture for its soul" Two of the designs are, however, worse than silly—"The Day of Judgment" and "The Meeting of a Family in Heaven"—as "here an appearance of libidinousness intrudes itself upon the holiness of our thoughts, and counteracts their impression . . .

At the awful day of Judgment, before the throne of God himself, a male and female figure are described in most indecent attitudes It is the same with the salutation of a man and his wife meeting in the pure mansions of Heaven" It is, perhaps, of the supersensuality of this reviewer that Blake was thinking when he wrote that a man could no longer embrace his own wife without being condemned as unchaste James Montgomery was also scandalized by some of the plates he sold his copy at the subscription price as unfit to lie on the parlour table, but regretted his haste when the work became rarer and more valuable

Not content with this, Cromek undoubtedly made Blake the victim of a second piece of trickery, though it is impossible to determine the truth of certain details from the various

various accounts given of the incident Gilchrist says that Cromek, some time in 1806, saw in Blake's work-room "a pencil drawing from a hitherto virgin subject—the Procession of Chaucer's Canterbury Pilgrims, Chaucer being a poet read by fewer then than now Cromek 'appeared highly delighted' with Blake's sketch, says Smith, as being an original treatment of an original subject In point of fact, he wanted to secure a finished drawing from it, for the purpose of having it engraved, and without employing Blake, just as he had served him over the Designs to The Grave, as I learn from other sources, on sifting the matter However, Blake was not to be taken in a second time Negotiations on that basis failed, but, as Blake understood the matter, he received a commission, tacit or express, from Cromek to execute the design " Smith mentions that Blake showed Cromek "the designs sketched out for a fresco picture" of the Canterbury Pilgrims, but does not say if Cromek made an offer for it, or gave a commission for the engraving, or even that Blake had expressed an intention of engraving it himself Allan Cunningham states that—"Blake declared that Cromek had actually commissioned him to paint the Pilgrimage before Stothard thought of his, to which Cromek replied that the order had been given in a vision, for he never gave it "

Gilchrist unfortunately gives no authority for his additions to Smith's story It is, at least, clear that Cromek had seen the drawing in 1806, and knew of Blake's intention to carry it further Cromek thereupon—and here there is no question about the facts—suggested the subject to Stothard and ordered an oil picture from him for the sum of sixty, afterwards increased to a hundred, guineas, with the intention of having it engraved by Bromley, for whom Schiavonetti was substituted later A certain general resemblance between the composition of the two paintings may be due, as Gilchrist suggests, to Cromek's hints to Stothard based on his examination of Blake's drawing Blake, not suspecting Cromek's treachery, saw and politely praised Stothard's unfinished picture, and Stothard talked of introducing his portrait By May 1807 Stothard's "Cabinet Picture" was exhibited, and at the end of the month Hoppner wrote an appreciation of it in a letter to Cumberland which was printed in Prince Hoare's paper, The Artist, and quoted by Cromek in his prospectus of the engraving. A proposal for publishing an engraving of the picture by subscription was inserted at the end of Blair's Grave, and a Critical Description of Stothard's picture was published by William Paulet Carey, an engraver, art critic, and dealer, who was apparently ignorant of Blake's grievance, as he refers incidentally to his designs for Blair's Grave with enthusiasm. Blake was furious when he realized that Stothard's painting was undertaken at Cromek's suggestion, naturally regarding it as a rival enterprise which had been pushed on to thwart his own intention. His anger is explicable whether negotiations with Cromek had taken place or not. There is, as we have seen, no direct evidence of an agreement with Cromek, but Gilchrist and Cunningham both indicate that Blake rightly or wrongly believed that there was one. He no doubt assumed too hastily that Stothard was a fellow conspirator of Cromek's and had known of his drawing from the beginning. It must also be remembered in explanation, if not in palliation, of Blake's rancour that Stothard had undoubtedly been considerably influenced by him—in short, like Fuseli, he had found Blake "damned good to steal from"—and his easily acquired popularity had probably been a source of some irritation before this incident. It appears from Gilchrist's account that Blake had not begun to paint his fresco until after the exhibition of Stothard's picture. Gilchrist adds, without giving his authority, that Blake, finding his drawing, which had been hanging above a door, a good deal effaced, attributed this to some malignant spell of Stothard's, until Flaxman pointed out that it was the usual fate of pencil drawings exposed to air and dust. If Blake ever made such a remark it would assuredly have been in jest, but Flaxman's matter of fact reply is quite in character. Be this as it may, Blake finished his fresco in time for his Exhibition in May 1809, and the account of it in A Descriptive Catalogue closes with a denunciation of Stothard, alike for his misconception of Chaucer's characters and for a false style of execution, and it must be admitted that Blake has expressed himself offensively. He retained the characteristics of a child child in his anger as in his lovelier moods His own drawing of Los with his hammer would have been a fitting tail-piece Later in the Catalogue, commenting on his picture of "The Bard," he describes more temperately the difference between Stothard's treatment of the subject and his own intentions

Poetry consists in these conceptions, and shall Painting be confined to the sordid drudgery of fac-simile representations of merely mortal and perishing substances, and not be as poetry and music are, elevated into its own proper sphere of invention and visionary conception? No, it shall not be so! Painting, as well as poetry and music, exists and exults in immortal thoughts If Mr B's Canterbury Pilgrims had been done by any other power than that of the poetic visionary, it would have been just as dull as his adversary's

A Prospectus of the Engraving of Chaucer's Canterbury Pilgrim's also issued in May 1809 refers to the Blair's Grave controversy in the words

It is hoped that the Painter will be allowed by the Public (notwithstanding artfully disseminated insinuations to the contrary) to be better able than any other to keep his own Characters and Expressions

The draft for a further Prospectus is bound in with the Rossetti MS The Prospectus, printed about 1810, is a revision of this draft, with the omission of the first paragraph The description of the engraving in both repeats with slight variations the opening of Number III in A Descriptive Catalogue, but the revised prospectus contains two additional paragraphs referring to the continued existence of the Tabarde Inn under the name of the Talbot and to St Thomas's Hospital

Blake, according to Gilchrist, began the engraving in September or October 1809, and the plate was issued on the 8th October 1810 It was re-worked by Blake, with the result that the later impressions are rather black and heavy, he also tinted a few copies in water colour

Early in 1812 a further attempt was made to advertise the engravings by the publication of a pamphlet containing Chaucer's Introduction to the Canterbury Tales in the original and also in a modernized version from Ogle's edition of 1741, illustrated by a portion of the engraving, with slight variation of detail, and a vignette, also by

Blake and probably representing Canterbury Cathedral The Preface, which Gilchrist suggests may have been written by Dr Malkin, contains an appreciation of the larger engraving, and explains that a part of Chaucer's poem is given "that the heads as represented by Mr Blake may be compared with the lineaments drawn by Chaucer, and I think the merit of the artist will be acknowledged"

The section of the Rossetti MS. written about 1810 contains a note that "This day is Publish'd Advertize-ments to Blake's Canterbury Pilgrims from Chaucer, containing Anecdotes of Artists Price 6d" but this pamphlet was probably neither issued nor completed. The raw material for it exists in the so-called Public Address of the Rossetti MS. In this disjointed set of notes Blake sets forth that good draughtsmanship is the essential foundation of both engraving and painting

Painting is drawing on Canvas, & Engraving is drawing on Copper, & Nothing Else, & he who pretends to be either Painter or Engraver without being a Master of drawing is an Imposter

Blake complains that Heath and Stothard, Flaxman, and even Romney held that drawing spoils an Engraver, for Each of these Men have repeatedly asserted this Absurdity to me in Condemnation of my Work & approbation of Heath's lame imitation, Stothard being such a fool as to suppose that his blundering blurs can be made out & delineated by any Engraver who knows how to cut dots & lozenges equally well with those little prints which I engraved after him five & twenty years ago & by which he got his reputation as a draughtsman

As always he contends that great art must be imaginative

Men think they can Copy Nature as Correctly as I copy Imagination, this they will find Impossible, & all the Copies or Pretended Copiers of Nature, from Rembrandt to Reynolds, Prove that Nature becomes to its Victim nothing but Blots & Blurs Why are Copiers of Nature Incorrect, while Copiers of Imagination are Correct? this is manifest to all While the Works of Pope & Dryden are look'd upon as the same Art with those of Milton & Shakespeare, while the Works of Strange & Woollett are look'd upon as the same Art with those of Rafael & Albert Durer, there can be no Art in a Nation but such as is Subservient to the interest of the Monopolising Trader

Blake hopes that this engraving will remove the misconception conception which has existed as to his own lack of execution the Lavish praise I have recieved from all Quarters for Invention & drawing has Generally been accompanied by this "he can conceive but he cannot Execute", this Absurd assertion has done me, & may still do me, the greatest mischief I call for Public protection against these Villains I am, like others, Just Equal in Invention & in Execution as my works show

The best comment on these notes is his own "Resentment for Personal Injuries has had some share in this Public Address, But Love to My Art & Zeal for my Country a much Greater"

The history of Blake's efforts to gain public acceptance for his "Canterbury Pilgrims" has been set out at some length because it occupied much of his thoughts and energies. The most unfortunate result of the controversy was his breach with Stothard, and for a time with Flaxman, which rendered his isolation during the ensuing years greater, and also materially affected his chance of getting work as an engraver. Flaxman, who took Stothard's part, exonerating him from complicity with Cromek, writes to Hayley on 4th May 1808—"at present I have no intercourse with Mr Blake." According to J. T. Smith, Stothard was unaware of Blake's treatment of the subject until he knew of his engraving in 1810. This is difficult to credit as Blake's own fresco was exhibited in 1809, and his Descriptive Catalogue contains allusions to the work of his rival, which were likely to have been brought to Stothard's notice. Moreover, the end of Cromek's letter, the earlier part of which has been already quoted, shows that Blake had expressed his indignation in 1807.

I will not detain you more than one minute. Why should you so furiously rage at the success of the little picture of "The Pilgrimage"? Three thousand people have now seen it and have approved of it. Believe me, yours is "the voice of one crying in the wilderness!"

You say the subject is low and contemptibly treated. For his excellent mode of treating the subject the poet has been admired for the last 400 years! The poor painter has not yet the advantage of antiquity on his side, therefore, with some people, an apology may be necessary for him. The conclusion of one of Squire Sumkin's letters to his mother in the Bath Guide will afford one. He speaks greatly to the purpose

"I very well know

Both

Both my subject and verse is exceedingly low,
 But if any great critic finds fault with my letter,
He has nothing to do but to send you a better "

With much respect for your talents, I remain, Sir, your real friend and well-wisher

R H CROMEK

It seems probable from what is known of Stothard's character that he was not a party to Cromek's trickery, but that he was induced to believe that Cromek had neither seen a drawing of the Pilgrims by Blake nor given him an order for an engraving, and that Blake, after admiring his own picture, had stolen the idea and invented the rest of the story. To take Cromek's word as against Blake's was, to say the least of it, a serious error of judgment in one who had known Blake for years, and the tenacity with which he clung to his opinion and nursed his wrath suggests that he was unable to forgive Blake's strictures on his pictures in the Descriptive Catalogue. Gilchrist states on the authority of Linnell, an eyewitness, that Blake some years later offered to shake hands with Stothard at a gathering of artists, but was repulsed, and again that Blake called on him when he was ill, but was refused admittance. Gilchrist's statement was, however, controverted by Stothard's son, who wrote to The Athenaeum in December 1863:

I cannot admit Mr Gilchrist's assertion that there was any apparent ill-will between my father and Blake, for on one occasion I was sent to Blake with a message from my father, when I found him living in a court off the Strand, and met him on the stairs, saying to me "he had a battle with the devil below to obtain the coals" which seemed to me to indicate madness.

Epigrams in the Rossetti MS show Blake's exasperation with his old companions. Some of these have been already quoted. They have little or no merit apart from their value as autobiography: one of the happier efforts is the parallel suggested between Hayley's belief that Pope's translation is finer than Homer's original and the persuasion of Flaxman and Stothard that Blake's designs are improved by the interpretation of Schiavonetti.

Thus Hayley on his Toilette seeing the Pope

Cries, "Homer is very much improv'd by Pope "

* * * *

Flaxman & Stothard smelling a sweet savour Cry, Blakified drawing spoils painter & Engraver, While I, looking up to my Umbrella,
 Resolv'd to be a very contrary fellow,
 Cry, looking quite from Skumference to Center,
 "No one can finish so high as the original Inventor "
 Thus Poor Schiavonetti died of the Cromek
 A thing that's tied around the Examiner's neck

Blake's friendship with Fuseli was happily unaffected by Cromek's knavery, as the epigram in the Rossetti MS shows. It is likely enough that Fuseli had openly supported Blake—he can scarcely have avoided expressing an opinion, at least in the matter of the Blair illustrations, for which he had written an introduction. It has been suggested that the writer of the attack on Fuseli in the Weekly Messenger was Robert Hunt, brother of Leigh Hunt, and that he avenged himself for Blake's protest by the spiteful personalities of his articles in the Examiner. This hypothesis is strengthened by the epigram To H

You think Fuseli is not a Great Painter I'm glad This is one of the best compliments he ever had

Blake himself did not exhibit again in the Academy till 1808, after an interval of nine years, and for the last time. His two water-colours, "Christ in the Sepulchre guarded by Angels" and "Jacob's Dream" were hung in the Drawing and Miniature Room. Some of the pictures shown in his exhibition of 1809 were painted in the years immediately preceding it, and his only known lithograph, "Job in Prosperity," belongs to 1807. Three water-colour drawings of the Ghost from Hamlet, Caesar's Ghost, and Jacques and the wounded Stag were executed in 1806. These are bound up in a second folio Shakespeare, which was interleaved and illustrated by various artists while in the possession of the Rev Joseph Thomas. The volume contains three other drawings by Blake: Richard III and the Ghosts who appeared to him, a stiff and symmetrical version of the Dream of Queen Catherine, dated 1809, and a symbolical design of a woman reclining on a cloud
and

and reading a book, with a flying figure of a man below her, and in the bottom right-hand corner a horse on its hind legs on the edge of a cliff. This last drawing is also dated 1809, and appears to be the same subject as that of Number VI in A Descriptive Catalogue—“‘A Spirit vaulting from a cloud to turn and wind a fiery Pegasus’”—Shakespeare. The Horse of Intellect is leaping from the cliffs of Memory and Reasoning, it is a barren Rock—it is also called the Barren Waste of Locke and Newton.”

Blake's first set of illustrations for Paradise Lost, sometimes known as the Liverpool set, belong to 1807, and in the following year he designed another series of nine drawings which were bought by Thomas Butts.

During 1807 he had also painted a small tempera of “The Last Judgment” for the Countess of Egremont, a more elaborate version than that of the same subject in the Blair's Grave. This is described in a letter of 18th January 1808, to Ozias Humphrey, through whom he had obtained the commission, although it would appear that he had known Lord Egremont during his Felpham days. The verses in the Rossetti MS beginning “The Caverns of the Grave I've seen,” refer to this painting, but it is not known whether Lady Egremont received a dedicatory copy of them.

Ozias Humphrey was another friend with whom Blake's relations remained undisturbed. Humphrey was a well-known miniature painter who spent some years in India. toward the end of his life his sight began to fail and he took to crayon portraits, being appointed in 1792 Painter in Crayons to His Majesty. He had himself secured in 1805 (four years and a half before his death) an annuity of £100 from Lord Egremont as a compromise on his proposed charge of six hundred guineas for the copy of a portrait which he made while in Italy. He had been intimate with Romney, and the oil-painting sold in 1912 as “Mrs Siddons and Miss Kemble,” by Romney, was decided in the ensuing lawsuit to be the work of Humphrey and to represent the Ladies Waldegrave.

Another friend still faithful to Blake was George Cumberland, and this in spite of the fact that his son was actually boarding for a time with Cromek. On 18th December

December 1808 he wrote to ask Blake whether he could obtain for a gentleman, whose name he does not mention, a complete set of the illuminated books. He refers to some sketches from Raphael which he had sent to Blake through his son, and regrets that young George had seized the opportunity of asking for a drawing "The 'Holy Family' is, like all your designs, full of genius and originality. I shall give it a handsome frame and show it to all who come to my house."

You talked also of publishing your new method of engraving. Send it to me, and I will do my best to prepare it for the press. Perhaps when done you might, with a few specimens of plates, make a little work for subscribers of it, as Du Crow did of his Aqua Tinta, selling about six pages for a guinea to non-subscribers. But if you do not choose this method, we might insert it in Nickleson's Journal or The Monthly Magazine, with reference to you for explanations.

Blake replies promptly

I am very much obliged by your kind ardour in my cause, & should immediately Engage in reviewing my former pursuits of painting if I had not so long been turned out of the old channel into a new one, that it is impossible for me to return to it without destroying my present course. New Vanities, or rather new pleasures, occupy my thoughts. New profits seem to arise before me so tempting that I have already involved myself in engagements that preclude all possibility of promising anything. I have, however, the satisfaction to inform you that I have Myself begun to print an account of my various Inventions in Art for which I have procured a Publisher, & am determin'd to pursue the plan of publishing what I may get printed without disarranging my time, which in future must alone be devoted to Designing & Painting.

This letter, with the exception of that to Humphrey, wholly concerned with a description of his painting of the Last Judgment, is the first private letter of Blake's extant since those to Hayley of 1805, and is therefore of special interest. It shows him in a position to decline a fairly lucrative commission, but there is no other information throwing light on his "engagements," by which he may only mean preparations for his exhibition of 1809, and orders for paintings from Mr Butts and others. The six water-colour drawings for the "Hymn on the Nativity," now in the Whitworth Institute Gallery, Manchester, were executed in 1809, and a second series, now in the H. E.

Huntington Library, probably about the same time Nothing is known of the projected account of his Inventions in Art, either published or unpublished He cannot refer to the Descriptive Catalogue of his exhibition, as he speaks in the Advertisement of "a Work on Art, now in the Press "

Blake's annotations to Reynolds' Discourses were also written about 1808 They give expression to his rebellion against the established convention, and were doubtless affected by his own recent experiences "This Man was Hired to Depress Art," he says of Reynolds, who had died in 1792, but was still in Blake's eyes responsible for the prevalence of false ideals

Having spent the Vigour of My Youth & Genius under the Oppression of Sr Joshua & his Gang of Cunning Hired Knaves Without Employment & as much as could possibly be Without Bread, The Reader must Expect to Read in all my Remarks on these Books Nothing but Indignation & Resentment While Sr Joshua was rolling in Riches, Barry was Poor & Unemploy'd except by his own Energy, Mortimer was call'd a Madman, & only Portrait Painting applauded & rewarded by the Rich & Great Reynolds & Gainsborough Blotted & Blurred one against the other & Divided all the English World between them Fuseli, Indignant, almost hid himself I am hid

After such an opening the reader will not expect a judicial attitude, but Blake's notes bring out the main points at issue between the orthodox and the ecstatic, namely, the emphasis laid by the former on generalization, and their tendency to set industry above inspiration, a tendency probably stressed by Reynolds as salutary for the students of the Royal Academy to whom his Discourses were addressed Reynolds, for example, says that "there is a rule, obtained out of general nature, to contradict which is to fall into deformity" Blake annotates this "What is General Nature? Is there Such a Thing? What is General Knowledge? Is there such a Thing? Strictly Speaking All Knowledge is Particular "

For Blake the Particular is the expression of individuality and accordingly Reynold's dictum "If you mean to preserve the most perfect beauty in its most perfect state, you cannot express the passions " calls for violent dissent

What Nonsense!

Passion & Expression is Beauty Itself The Face that is Incapable of Passion & Expression is deformity Itself Let it be Painted & Patch'd

Patch'd & Praised & Advertised for Ever, it will only be admired by Fools

In the margin of the fifth page of the first Discourse Blake has written

Reynolds' Opinion was that Genius May be Taught & that all Pretence to Inspiration is a Lie & a Deceit, to say the least of it For if it is a Deceit, the whole Bible is Madness This Opinion originates in the Greeks' calling the Muses Daughters of Memory

And when Reynolds writes "My notion of nature comprehends not only the forms which nature produces, but also the nature and internal fabrick and organization of the human mind and imagination" Blake annotates "Here is a Plain Confession that he Thinks Mind & Imagination not to be above the Mortal & Perishing Nature Such is the End of Epicurean or Newtonian Philosophy, it is Atheism"

Reynolds, who knows nothing of the Golden Age, ruined by Satanic reason, which Art and Poetry, inspired by Imagination, can alone restore, holds that "The regular progress of cultivated life is from necessities to accommodations, from accommodations to ornaments" Blake dissents

The Bible says That Cultivated Life Existed First Uncultivated Life comes afterwards from Satan's Hirelings Necessaries, Accommodations & Ornaments are the whole of Life Satan took away Ornament First Next he took away Accommodations, & Then he became Lord & Master of Necessaries

Yet Blake is sometimes in agreement, but when this is the case he usually points out that Reynolds has been inconsistent with his own doctrines For instance

A firm and determined outline is one of the characteristics of the great style in painting, and let me add, that he who possesses the knowledge of the exact form which every part of nature ought to have, will be fond of expressing that knowledge with correctness and precision in all his works

Blake notes "A Noble Sentence! Here is a Sentence, Which overthrows all his Book"

Mention of the Venetian, Dutch, and Flemish schools provokes, of course, much railing, but Reynolds and his annotator are united in their admiration of Poussin.

Several

Several of the Epigrams in the Rossetti MS question the genuineness of Reynolds' admiration for Michael Angelo and it is interesting to note that Farington represents Northcote, his biographer, as entertaining a similar suspicion

Oct 18, 1803

Northcote doubted his having any real feeling for the excellencies of Michael Angelo, & thought his praise was in compliance with established opinion

One perceives in these Annotations to Reynolds' Discourses a jarring note of resentment for personal injuries which is frankly admitted in the Public Address. The same feeling was to prompt him to his one great effort to secure public recognition for himself as the representative of imaginative art, his Exhibition of 1809. His lyric ecstasy had fallen years ago on deaf ears, the last words of his Mystic Gospel were not yet written. With poets and mystics he was not in daily rivalry, but the art of painting, as he conceived it, had been mocked in his own person, the true prophet had been feebly interpreted and forestalled by the false. It was as a painter, therefore, that he struggled for the suffrage of his contemporaries. He stood like a child, with his back to the wall, waving his little flag in a corner, and shouting with pathetic truculence. But the child's voice has been heard at last, what matter if his words are petulant and a little absurd? He was in truth the genius above the age, his flag the banner of imaginative art. Whatever the changes of fashion, however his faults and failures may be exaggerated or minimized from time to time, his claim is never likely to be seriously gainsaid by those qualified to judge. Imperfect though his vessel may be, in it he indeed bore the divine fire.

The Exhibition was held at James Blake's shop in Broad Street, Golden Square, and was open from May till September. The motto of the Advertisement, "Fit audience find tho' few," disclaims competition with the curious crowd who, as Cromek boasted, had been to see Stothard's Canterbury Pilgrims. Besides naming the chief pictures the Advertisement explains the advantages of a "Portable Fresco" for the decoration of buildings, and promises promises an account of Blake's recovery of the lost art of fresco painting. As this account has disappeared or was never written, J. T. Smith's description may be quoted:

Blake's modes of preparing his ground, and laying them over his panels for painting, mixing his colours, and manner of working, were those which he considered to have been practised by the earliest fresco painters, whose productions still remain, in numerous instances vivid and permanently fresh. His ground was a mixture of whiting and carpenter's glue, which he passed over several times in their coatings; his colours he ground himself, and also united them with the same sort of glue, but in a much weaker state. He would in the course of painting a picture, pass a very thin transparent wash of glue-water over the whole of the parts he had worked upon, and then proceed with his painting.

This process I have tried, and find, by using my mixture warm, that I can produce the same texture as possessed in Blake's pictures of the Last Judgment, and others of his productions, particularly in Varley's curious picture of the personified Flea. Blake preferred mixing his colours with carpenter's glue, to gum, on account of the latter cracking in the sun, and becoming humid in moist weather.

Gilchrist gives Linnell's explanations, which supplements Smith's in some respects:

He evidently founded his claim to the name fresco on the material he used, which was water-colour on a plaster ground (literally glue and whiting), but he always called it either fresco, gesso, or plaster. And he certainly laid this ground on too much like plaster on a wall. When so laid on to canvas or linen, it was sure to crack, and, in some cases, for want of care and protection from damp, would go to ruin. Some of his pictures in this material on board have been preserved in good condition, and so have a few even on cloth. They come nearer to tempera in process than to anything else, inasmuch as white was laid on and mixed with the colours which were tempered with common carpenter's glue.

Linnell also said that he had lent Blake a copy of Cennino Cennini's Treatise, and Blake had told him that his materials and methods were the same as those described by Cennini. Blake complains in his advertisement that his pictures had been regularly refused at the Royal Academy. He may refer only to the exclusion of his frescoes from the main rooms where the oil-paintings were hung, as he had exhibited five times in the drawing and miniature room. On the other hand his last exhibits were two water-colour drawings, and it is possible that his frescoes had been actually refused during the nine years in which he was not represented. He alludes to a description of his work as "but an unscientific and irregular Eccentricity, a Madman's Scrawls" this may refer to some Press criticism which has not yet been traced, as it is inapplicable to the first attack in the Examiner, and the Exhibition itself was the excuse for the second. The last sentence sounds his challenge.

If Italy is enriched and made great by RAPHAEL, if MICHAEL ANGELO is its supreme glory, if Art is the glory of a Nation, if Genius and Inspiration are the great Origin and Bond of Society, the distinction my Works have obtained from those who best understand such things, calls for my Exhibition as the greatest of Duties to my Country.

The Descriptive Catalogue, included in the 2s 6d charge for admission to the Exhibition, is a duodecimo volume of thirty-eight leaves in a grey paper wrapper only about ten copies of it have been recorded. Nine frescoes, including some of the "experiment pictures" to which reference has already been made, and seven water-colour drawings were shown, including the "Penance of Jane Shore," painted about 1779. Four of the frescoes and one of the drawings have disappeared; the remainder are reproduced in the third volume of the Nonesuch Edition.

The Catalogue is not merely a commentary on the sixteen exhibits, it is a manifesto eulogizing Raphael and Michael Angelo at the expense of Titian and Correggio, Rubens and Rembrandt. In reading Blake's fierce and foolish denunciations of Rubens as "a most outrageous demon," and Correggio as "a soft and effeminate, and consequently a most cruel demon, whose whole delight is to cause endless labour to whoever suffers him to enter his mind," two facts must be borne in mind. Blake had seen very few original paintings by old masters; his opinions were based mainly on bad copies, or on prints, not always of the best. He was, therefore, really attacking the supposed influence of those masters, whom he ignorantly condemned, on the moderns whose style he disliked. Moreover, as already hinted, he had little talent for discriminating assimilation, and the failure of any such effort was regarded by him, not as the result of his own limitations, but as manful resistance to temptation by "blotting and blurring demons," and insidious attacks by the spirits of Titian and Correggio In his furious casting-out of error he did not distinguish between bad art and art foreign to his own genius Blake has double dotted the "i" in this mistake, but he is by no means the only artist who has made it He states his case in the Preface

The quarrel of the Florentine with the Venetian is not because he does not understand Drawing, but because he does not understand Colouring How should he, he who does not know how to draw a hand or a foot, know how to colour it?

Colouring does not depend on where the Colours are put, but on where the lights and darks are put, and all depends on Form or Outline On where that is put, where that is wrong, the Colouring never can be right, and it is always wrong in Titian and Correggio, Rubens and Rembrandt Till we get rid of Titian and Correggio, Rubens and Rembrandt, We shall never equal Rafael and Albert Durer, Michael Angelo, and Julio Romano

The Venetian and Flemish practice is broken lines, broken masses, and unbroken colours Mr B's practice is unbroken lines, unbroken masses, and unbroken colours Their art is to lose form, his art is to find form, and to keep it His arts are opposite to theirs in all things

And again

If losing and obliterating the outline constitutes a Picture, Mr B will never be so foolish as to do one Such art of losing the outlines is the art of Venice and Flanders, it loses all character, and leaves what some people call expression, but this is a false notion of expression, expression cannot exist without character as its stamina, and neither character nor expression can exist without firm and determinate outline

In his campaign against "generalization" he raises the importance of outline to a mystic truth

The great and golden rule of art, as well as of life, is this That the more distinct, sharp, and wirey the bounding line, the more perfect the work of art, and the less keen and sharp, the greater is the evidence of weak imitation, plagiarism, and bungling Great inventors, in all ages, knew this, Protogenes and Apelles knew each other by this line Rafael and Michael Angelo and Albert Durer are known by this and this alone The want of this determinate and bounding form evidences the want of idea in the artist's mind, and the pretence of the plagiary in all its branches How do we distinguish the oak from the beech, the horse from the ox, but by the bounding outline? How do we distinguish one face or countenance from another, but by the bounding line and its infinite inflexions and movements? What is it that that builds a house and plants a garden, but the definite and determinate? What is it that distinguishes honesty from knavery, but the hard and wirev line of rectitude and certainty in the actions and intentions? Leave out this line, and you leave out life itself, all is chaos again, and the line of the almighty must be drawn out upon it before man or beast can exist

The Catalogue closes quietly with a dignified expression of self-confidence

If a man is master of his profession, he cannot be ignorant that he is so, and if he is not employed by those who pretend to encourage art, he will employ himself, and laugh in secret at the pretences of the ignorant, while he has every night dropped into his shoe, as soon as he puts it off, and puts out the candle, and gets into bed, a reward for the labours of the day, such as the world cannot give, and patience and time await to give him all that the world can give

It may be left to professional critics to discuss how far Blake's own achievements justify his pretensions. His absorption in great imaginative conceptions sometimes made him blind to actual results. his reckless statement to Crabb Robinson that the diagrams in Law's translation of Boehme could not have been bettered by Michael Angelo illustrates this confusion. But, if his frequent boasts of his equality with Michael Angelo and Raphael excite a smile, it must be remembered that he never had the chance for which he longed of executing great decorative frescoes, and, had he been enabled to work on a large scale, he might himself have recognized and amended some of his weaknesses and defects. And—fruitless wish—could John Hawkins but have sent Blake not to Rome, but to Borgo San Sepolcro and Arezzo! Was not Piero della Francesca the master from whom he would have learnt the most? He writes of four of the drawings, "The Body of Abel found by Adam and Eve," "The Soldiers casting lots for Christ's Garments," "Jacob's Ladder," and "Ruth"

The above four drawings the Artist wishes were in Fresco on an enlarged scale to ornament the altars of Churches, and to make England, like Italy, respected by respectable men of other countries on account of Art. It is not the want of Genius that can hereafter be laid to our charge, the Artist who has done these Pictures and Drawings will take care of that, let those who govern the Nation take care of the other. The times require that every one should speak out boldly

England

England expects that every man should do his duty, in Arts, as well as in Arms or in the Senate

There is no indication whether the exhibition was a success in point of either quality or quantity of visitors. Blake sent Ozias Humphrey a ticket of admission and also a copy of the Catalogue, with a note saying that it explains the difference between their theories of art. Humphrey had, perhaps, deprecated the lack of colour in the "Last Judgment," which Blake had painted for Lady Egremont. Cumberland, hearing of the exhibition from his son, wrote at once for two copies of the Catalogue, but there is no record of a visit. Southey quotes the greater part of Blake's commentary on "The Ancient Britons" in The Doctor, and he refers to it as "one of his worst pictures." In 1830 he wrote of the exhibition "The colouring of all was as if it had consisted merely of black and red ink in all intermixture. Some of the designs were hideous, especially those which he considered as most supernatural in their conception and likenesses. In others you perceived that nothing but madness had prevented him from being the sublimest painter of this or any other country." Crabb Robinson, who had as yet no personal acquaintance with Blake, had undertaken to write a paper on his work for a German magazine, the Vaterländisches Museum, and therefore went to 28 Broad Street in search of copy. He wrote in his Reminiscences of Blake, dated the 19th February 1852, and based on an account written in 1825,

These paintings filled several rooms of an ordinary dwelling-house, and for the sight a half-crown was demanded of the visitor, for which he had a catalogue. This catalogue I possess, and it is a very curious exposure of the state of the artist's mind. I wished to send it to Germany and to give a copy to Lamb and others, so I took four, and giving 10s. bargained that I should be at liberty to go again. "Free! as long as you live," said the brother, astonished at such liberality, which he had never experienced before, nor I dare say did afterwards.

His description of the pictures themselves, as might be expected after his comments on the Blair illustrations, is unsympathetic and inaccurate.

There were about thirty oil-paintings, the colouring excessively dark and high, the veins black, and the colour of the primitive men very like that of the Red Indians. In his estimation they would probably be the primitive men. Many of his designs were unconscious imitations imitations This appears also in his published works, the designs of Blair's Grave, which Fuseli and Schiavonetti highly extolled—and in his designs to illustrate Job, published after his death for the benefit of his widow

It will be observed that Robinson gets the number of pictures and the medium wrong, and his general allegation of unconscious imitation means no more than that he had seen other pictures of similar subjects of which he was reminded His remark about Red Indians probably applies chiefly to the fresco of "The Antient Britons," as he says in his article that in this picture the "naked forms are almost crimson," at the same time describing it as Blake's "greatest and most perfect work" Of the "Canterbury Pilgrims" he says that "Lamb preferred it greatly to Stodart's, and declared that Blake's description was the finest criticism he had ever read of Chaucer's poem"

Charles Lamb himself, induced no doubt to visit the exhibition by the gift of the Catalogue, is more enthusiastic than Crabb Robinson about Blake's work On 15th May 1824 he wrote to Bernard Barton

Blake is a real name, I assure you, and a most extraordinary man, if he be still living He is the Robert Blake, whose wild designs accompany a splendid folio edition of the "Night Thoughts", which you may have seen, in one of which he pictures the parting of soul and body by a solid mass of human form floating off, God knows how, from a lumpish mass (fac Simile to itself) left behind on the dying bed He paints in water colours marvellous strange pictures, visions of his brain, which he asserts that he has seen They have great merit He has seen the old Welsh bards on Snowdon—he has seen the Beautifullest, the strongest, and the Ugliest Man, left alone from the Massacre of the Britons by the Romans, and has painted them from memory (I have seen his paintings), and asserts them to be as good as the figures of Raphael and Angelo, but not better as they had precisely the same retrovisions and prophetic visions with themselves [himself] The painters in oil (which he will have it that neither of them practised) he affirms to have been the ruin of art, and affirms that all the while he was engaged in his Water paintings, Titian was disturbing him, Titian the Ill Genius of Oil Painting His pictures—one in particular, the Canterbury Pilgrims (far above Stodard's)—have great merit, but hard, dry, yet with grace He has written a Catalogue of them with a most spirited criticism on Chaucer, but mystical and full of Vision

Lamb kept his copy of the Catalogue, binding it in one cover with Elia's Confessions of a Drunkard, Southey's Wat Tyler

Tyler, and the Poems of Rochester and Lady Winchelsea. He also possessed an engraving of the Pilgrims, one of the two copies which Crabb Robinson bought from Mrs. Blake after her husband's death. The last paragraphs of Blake's description of his fresco of the "Canterbury Pilgrims" (concerning which Cromek's parlour boarder wrote gleefully to his father, "He has given Stothard a compleet set down") have already been referred to, but it is in the earlier part that Blake's enjoyment and understanding of Chaucer, so sympathetic to Lamb, appears unalloyed by controversial matter. W. P. Ker has suggested that "Milton's Samson may help to explain what Blake meant when he insisted that great ideal figures are not abstract." So Blake's own comments on the "Canterbury Pilgrims" help to explain why he attaches so much importance to "minute particulars," and the distinction between "minute particulars" and irrelevant details. He writes

The Characters of Chaucer's Pilgrims are the characters which compose all ages and nations as one age falls, another rises, different to mortal sight, but to immortals only the same, for we see the same characters repeated again and again, in animals, vegetables, minerals, and in men, nothing new occurs in identical existence, Accident ever varies, Substance can never suffer change nor decay.

Of Chaucer's characters, as described in his Canterbury Tales, some of the names or titles are altered by time, but the characters themselves for ever remain unaltered, and consequently they are the physiognomies or lineaments of universal human life, beyond which Nature never steps. Names alter, things never alter. I have known multitudes of those who would have been monks in the age of monkery, who in this deistical age are deists. As Newton numbered the stars, and as Linneus numbered the plants, so Chaucer numbered the classes of men. Thus the reader will observe, that Chaucer makes every one of his characters perfect in his kind, every one is an Antique Statue, the image of a class, and not of an imperfect individual.

It is tempting to linger over Blake's delightful descriptions of Chaucer's different personages, but the whole should be read and compared with the engraving.

The most striking picture in the exhibition, now unfortunately lost, was apparently "The Ancient Britons," representing the only three who escaped from the battle of Camlan, the strongest Man, the Beautifullest Man, and the Ugliest Man. In his own description of this fresco Blake says—

The

The Strong Man represents the human sublime The Beautiful Man represents the human pathetic, which was in the wars of Eden divided into male and female The Ugly Man represents the human reason They were originally one man who was fourfold He was self-divided, and his real humanity slain on the stems of generation, and the form of the fourth was like the Son of God

Blake goes on to say that the Beautiful Man represents his own idea of intellectual Beauty, and "acts from duty and anxious solicitude for the fates of those for whom he combats" The Strong Man is "a receptacle of Wisdom, a sublime energizer," and "acts from conscious superiority, and marches on in fearless dependance on the divine decrees, raging with the inspirations of a prophetic mind" The Ugly Man, on whose villainous aspect Blake dwells with gusto, "acts from love of carnage, and delight in the savage barbarities of war, rushing with sportive precipitation into the very jaws of the affrighted enemy" The battlefield is strewn with dead and dying, armed Roman and naked Britons, and the blood-red sun sets behind mountains, among which rise Druid temples

Fortunately a young art student, whose memories of Blake are reserved for a later chapter, has left some account of this painting, although he does not mention a visit to the exhibition Seymour Kirkup says in a letter to Lord Houghton of 25th March 1870

I thought it his best work—a battle from the Welsh Triads The three last men who remained of Arthur's army, and who defeated the enemy—the strongest man, the handsomest man, and the ugliest man As he was an enemy to oil painting, which he said was the ruin of painting, he invented a method of applying fresco to canvas, and this lifesize picture was the result It made so great an impression on me that I made a drawing of it fifty years afterwards, which I gave to Swinburne You can see it It [the picture] must have been about 14 feet by 10 In texture it was rather mealy, as we call it, and was too red, the sun seemed setting in blood It was not Greek in character Though the figures reminded one of Hercules, Apollo, and Pan, they were naked Britons If you should ever hear of it, it is worth seeing There is more power and drawing in it than in any of his works that I have known, even in Blair's Grave, respecting which he was enraged against Schiavonetti for correcting some defects

The drawing to which Kirkup refers has unluckily not been discovered among Swinburne's papers His testimony is the more interesting as he was not an admirer

of Blake's work. He describes himself as belonging to "the opposite party of colourists," and says that his "beau idéal was the union of Phidias and Titian." "Blake," he writes to W. M. Rossetti, "had but little effect in the works that I remember. I should have liked the heads more British and less Grecian."

It would seem from these references that The Ancient Britons and the Pilgrims made most impression on the minds of Blake's contemporaries. Crabb Robinson observed, but dares not describe in his article, "The Spiritual Form of Pitt guiding Behemoth and The Spiritual Form of Nelson guiding Leviathan" the water-colour drawings—lovely as we know some of them to be—attract no special attention. A second article in the Examiner, far more intemperate than the first, was probably also written by Robert Hunt. A few extracts will account for Blake's bitter indignation.

If beside the stupid and mad-brained political project of their rulers, the sane part of the people of England required fresh proof of the alarming increase of the effects of insanity, they will be too well convinced from its having lately spread into the hitherto sober region of Art. I say hitherto, because I cannot think with many, that the vigorous genius of the present worthy Keeper of the Royal Academy is touched, though no one can deny that his Muse has been on the verge of insanity, since it has brought forth, with more legitimate offspring, the furious and disturbed beings of an extravagant imagination. But, when the ebullitions of a distempered brain are mistaken for the sallies of genius by those whose works have exhibited the soundest thinking in art, the malady has indeed attained a pernicious height, and it becomes a duty to endeavour to arrest its progress. Such is the case with the productions and admirers of William Blake, an unfortunate lunatic, whose personal inoffensiveness secures him from confinement, and, consequently, of whom no public notice would have been taken, if he was not forced on the notice and admiration of the Examiner in having been held up to the public admiration by many esteemed amateurs and professors as a genius in some respect original and legitimate. The praises which these gentlemen bestowed last year on this unfortunate man's illustrations of Blair's Grave, have, in feeding his vanity, stimulated him to publish his madness more largely, and thus again exposed him, if not to the derision, at least to the pity of the public. Thus encouraged, the poor man fancies himself a great master, and has painted a few wretched pictures, some of which are unintelligible allegory, others an attempt at sober character by caricature representation, and the whole "blotted and blurred", and very badly drawn. These he calls an Exhibition, of which he has published a Catalogue, or rather a farrago of nonsense, unintelligibility unintelligibleness and egregious vanity, the wild effusions of a dis-tempered brain That insanity should elevate itself to this fancied importance, is the usual effect of the unfortunate malady, but that men of taste, in their sober senses, should mistake its unmeaning and distorted conceptions for the flashes of genius, is indeed a phenomenon

Blake's comment on this outrageous attack is to be found in the Public Address of the Rossetti MS

The manner in which my Character has been blasted these forty years both as an artist & a Man, may be seen particularly in a Sunday Paper call'd the Examiner, Publish'd in Beaufort Buildings (We all know that Editors of Newspapers trouble their heads very little about art & science, & that they are always paid for what they put in upon these ungracious Subjects), & the manner in which I have routed out the nest of villains will be seen in a Poem concerning my Three Years' Herculean Labours at Felpham, which I will soon Publish Secret Calumny & open Professions of Friendship are common enough all the world over, but have never been so good an occasion of Poetic Imagery When a Base Man means to be your Enemy he always begins with being your Friend Flaxman cannot deny that one of the very first Monuments he did, I gratuitously designed for him, at the same time he was blasting my character as an Artist to Macklin, my Employer, as Macklin told me at the time, how much of his Homer & Dante he will allow to be mine I do not know, as he went far enough off to Publish them, even to Italy, but the Public will know & Posterity will know

Many People are so foolish [as] to think that they can wound Mr Fuseli over my Shoulder, they will find themselves mistaken, they could not wound even Mr Barry so

Blake here suggests that the Examiner is the paid agent of those who have injured his reputation, of "that nest of villains" with whom he has already dealt in a poem concerning his labours at Felpham This may refer to some poem now lost, but it is possible that Blake is alluding to those pages of Milton in which he describes the struggle to free himself from the interference of "spiritual enemies," and that in the phrase "Herculean Labours" he refers to the "fight thro' a Hell of terrors and horrors . . ." in a divided existence, which was rewarded by the visionary knowledge of spiritual unity symbolized by the end of the poem It was one of the unfortunate results of the Cromek controversy that he had revived old grudges against Flaxman and now regarded him as having always been a false friend Three of the four known copies of Milton had probably been o printed

printed in 1808, but there is no evidence that any of them had been "published," that is, issued by Blake, before the Public Address was written. In the Public Address Blake expresses respect for Hogarth as an original painter whose execution can be neither copied nor improved. He had engraved "When my Hero in Court Appears" (from the Beggar's Opera) after Hogarth in 1790 for Boydell, and his water-colour drawing of "Satan, Sin and Death at Hell's Gate" follows closely Hogarth's treatment of the same subject.

It would seem that neither criticism nor any disillusion as to the fitness of his audience prevented Blake from entertaining the idea of another exhibition. The notes in the Rossetti MS known as A Vision of the Last Judgment, written about 1810, have as sub-title "For the year 1810 Additions to Blake's Catalogue of Pictures &c" and are chiefly concerned with a fresco of the Last Judgment, a different rendering of the subject from that painted for the Countess of Egremont and described in the letter to Ozias Humphrey.

W M Rossetti states that this fresco measured seven feet by five and was estimated to contain 1,000 figures. J T Smith is enthusiastic about it.

Had he fortunately lived till the next year's exhibition at Somerset House, the public would then have been astonished at his exquisite finishing of a Fresco picture of the Last Judgment, containing upwards of one thousand figures, many of them wonderfully conceived, and grandly drawn. The lights of this extraordinary performance have the appearance of silver and gold, but upon Mrs Blake's assuring me that there was no silver used, I found, upon a closer examination, that a blue wash had been passed over those parts of the gilding which receded, and the lights of the forward objects, which were also of gold, were heightened with a warm colour, to give the appearance of the two metals.

From his allusion to Mrs Blake as his informant it would appear that Smith saw the fresco after her husband's death. Much importance need not therefore be attached to a story told by Gilchrist: "Blake, on looking up one day at this fresco, which hung in his front room, candidly exclaimed, as one who was present tells me, 'I spoiled that—made it darker, it was much finer, but a French-woman here [a fellow-lodger] didn't like it'." Gilchrist also also says that the painting was a favourite of Blake's and that he lavished finishing touches on it during his last years. The fresco has now unfortunately disappeared, but sketches probably used for it are still in existence.

The conception of a Last Judgment made a special appeal to Blake, both as artist and as mystic, because he believed that error must take definite shape before it could be cast out: however bad things might be there was the consoling thought that an essential development was taking place. In these notes he explains that

The Last Judgment [will be] when all those are Cast away who trouble Religion with Questions concerning Good & Evil or Eating of the Tree of those Knowledges or Reasonings which hinder the Vision of God, turning all into a Consuming Fire. When Imagination, Art & Science & all Intellectual Gifts, all the Gifts of the Holy Ghost are look'd upon as of no use & only Contention remains to Man, then the Last Judgment begins, & its Vision is seen by the [Imaginative Eye] of Every one according to the situation he holds. The Last Judgment is one of these Stupendous Visions. I have represented it as I saw it, to different People it appears differently as every thing else does, for tho' on Earth things seem Permanent, they are less permanent than a Shadow, as we all know too well.

* * * *

The Last Judgment is an Overwhelming of Bad Art & Science. Mental Things are alone Real, what is call'd Corporeal, Nobody knows of its Dwelling Place, it is in Fallacy & its existence an Imposition. Where is Existence Out of Mind or Thought? Where is it but in the Mind of a Fool? Some people flatter themselves that there will be No Last Judgment & that Bad Art will be adopted & mixed with Good Art, That Error or Experiment will make a Part of Truth, & they Boast that it is its Foundation, these People flatter themselves I will not Flatter them. Error is Created. Truth is Eternal. Error, or Creation, will be Burned up, & then, & not till Then, Truth or Eternity will appear. It is Burnt up the Moment Men cease to behold it. I assert for My Self that I do not behold the outward Creation & that to me it is hindrance & not Action, it is as the dirt upon my feet, No part of Me. "What," it will be Question'd, "When the Sun rises, do you not see a round disk of fire somewhat like a Guinea?" O no, no, I see an Innumerable company of the Heavenly Host crying, "Holy, Holy, Holy is the Lord God Almighty." I question not my Corporeal or Vegetative Eye any more than I would Question a Window concerning a Sight. I look thro' it & not with it.

Blake explains in the course of these notes that all the personages depicted symbolize not individuals but states through which man passes like a traveller.

It

It ought to be understood that the Persons, Moses & Abraham, are not here meant, but the States Signified by those Names, the Individuals being representatives or Visions of those States as they were reveal'd to Mortal Man in the Series of Divine Revelations as they are written in the Bible, these various States I have seen in my Imagination, when distant they appear as One Man, but as you approach they appear Multitudes of Nations

Some of the figures are purely symbolical

Sin is also represented as a female bound in one of the Serpent's folds, surrounded by her fiends Death is Chain'd to the Cross, & Time falls together with death, dragged down by a demon crown'd with Laurel

His interpretation is not without humour

The Ladies will be pleas'd to see that I have represented the Furies by Three Men & not by three Women The Spectator may suppose them Clergymen in the Pulpit, scourging Sin instead of Forgiving it

These notes abound in passages which throw light on Blake's metaphysics several have already been quoted Another extract, pathetically autobiographical, may be given here

Some People & not a few Artists have asserted that the Painter of this Picture would not have done so well if he had been properly Encourag'd Let those who think so, reflect on the State of Nations under Poverty & their incapability of Art, tho' Art is Above Either, the Argument is better for Affluence than Poverty, & tho' he would not have been a greater Artist, yet he would have produc'd Greater works of Art in proportion to his means

Blake hated money, but money is as obtrusive by its absence as by its excess, and it is one of the tragic elements in his life that his old age was even less free from pecuniary care than his youth had been It is probably true enough that he would have done greater work had he but met with a few more patrons as generous and as self-effacing as Thomas Butts To imagine him peacefully engaged on public work for State or Church is more difficult Is there even yet a committee, or dean and chapter, who could be relied on not to obstruct the path of genius?

CHAPTER VII

YEARS OF NEGLECT

*I rose up at the dawn of day——
Get thee away! get thee away!
Pray'st thou for Riches' away! away!
This is the Throne of Mammon Grey*

*Said I, "this sure is very odd
I took it to be the throne of God
For every Thing besides I have
It is only for Riches that I can crave*

*I have Mental Joy & Mental Health And Mental Friends & Mental Wealth,
I've a Wife I love & that loves me,
I've all But Riches bodily*

*I am in God's presence night & day,
And he never turns his face away
The accuser of sins by my side does stand
And he holds my money bag in his hand,*

*For my worldly things God makes him pay,
And he'd pay more if to him I would Pray,
And so you may do the Worst you can do,
Be assur'd Mr devil I won't pray to you*

*Then If for Riches I must not pray, God knows I little of Prayers need say
So as a Church is known by its Steeple,
If I pray it must be for other People*

*He says, if I do not worship him for a God,
I shall eat coarser food & go worse shod,
So as I don't value such things as these,
You must do, Mr devil, just as God please "*

THUS wrote Blake after his failure to secure public recognition as a prophet of imaginative art, and it was decreed that neither riches nor fame should be his lot

Only one letter has been preserved for the years 1810-1817, but this is not remarkable, as he had few regular correspondents who kept any of his letters Communication

tion with Hayley had probably ceased before 1811 Flaxman and Thomas Butts were both at hand Ozias Humphrey had died in 1810 There remains George Cumberland, whose son was now a convenient messenger, but Cumberland does not appear to have hoarded all Blake's letters only six are extant, five written before 1809, and the last in 1827 A few references by his contemporaries and the drawings and engravings which can be dated are, therefore, the only source of information about Blake's life between 1810 and 1818 Seymour Kirkup, whose description of the large fresco, "The Ancient Britons," has been quoted, left an interesting account of his acquaintance with Blake in letters to Lord Houghton, Swinburne, and W M Rossetti Kirkup, a friend of Landor, Trelawney, and the Brownings, settled in Florence about 1817 He discovered the lost portrait of Dante by Giotto, and was dignified in consequence by the title of Barone Like Elizabeth Barrett Browning and that indefatigable writer, old Mrs Trollope, he fell a victim to "Sludge the Medium," Daniel Home, and it may be inferred that his spiritualistic experiences gave him retrospectively some sympathy with Blake, which he had lacked as a boy Swinburne visited him in Florence in 1864 in order to glean memories of Blake for his Critical Essay Kirkup had been a student in the Antique School at the Royal Academy from 1810-1816 He was an old school fellow of the younger Butts, and told Lord Houghton that during these years he was much with Blake, regretting that he did not sufficiently prize his qualities, or learn as much from him as he might have done

Besides, I thought him mad I do not think so now I never suspected him of imposture His manner was too honest for that He was very kind to me, though very positive in his opinion, with which I never agreed His excellent old wife was a sincere believer in all his visions She told me seriously one day, "I have very little of Mr Blake's company, he is always in Paradise" She prepared his colours, and was as good as a servant He had no other

It has been suggested that Kirkup was actually a pupil of Blake's, but this seems improbable as he laments in a letter to W M Rossetti that he "neglected sadly the opportunities the Buttses threw in my way I only heard of him as engraving-master to my old schoolfellow Tommy" Kirkup thought that the Butts did not value Blake as they should have done, but his impression may have been derived chiefly from the irreverent Tommy. Another remark of Kirkup's shows that in spite of his epigrams Blake still spoke generously of Flaxman's work: "I used to wonder [at] his praise of Fuseli and Flaxman, my two first masters, for their tastes were so different to his, which Fuseli especially disliked, and he was a magnanimous fellow, though a sharp critic." Fuseli must have made some adverse comment on a particular design or characteristic of Blake's in Kirkup's hearing, as there is ample evidence that he was in general an enthusiastic admirer.

Though in boyhood Kirkup thought Blake mad, as the young Stothard had done, and perhaps on equally trivial grounds, there was apparently nothing in his description to Swinburne which supported this impression.

Mr Kirkup also speaks of the courtesy with which, on occasion, Blake would waive the question of his spiritual life, if the subject seemed at all incomprehensible or offensive to the friend with him, he would no more obtrude than suppress his faith, and would practically accept and act upon the dissent or distaste of his companions without visible vexation or the rudeness of a thwarted fanatic.

It may have been from Kirkup that Swinburne heard a story of Blake as Don Quixote which only appears in the Critical Essay.

Seeing once, somewhere about St Giles's, a wife knocked about by some husband or other violent person, in the open street, a bystander saw this also—that a small swift figure coming up in full swing of passion fell with such counter violence of reckless and raging rebuke upon the poor ruffian, that he recoiled and collapsed, with ineffectual cudgel, persuaded, as the bystander was told on calling afterwards, that the very devil himself had flown upon him in defence of the woman, such Tartarean overflow of execration and oburgation had issued from the mouth of her champion. It was the fluent tongue of Blake which had proved too strong for this fellow's arm: the artist, doubtless, not caring to remember the consequences, proverbial even before Molière's time, of such interference with conjugal casualties.

Southey, who had been interested in Blake's Exhibition, called on him in South Molton Street in the summer of 1811. Crabb Robinson records in his Diary for 24th July

Late

Late to C Lamb's Found a very large party there Southey had been with Blake & admired both his designs & his poetic talents at the same time that he held him for a decided madman Blake, he says, spoke of his visions with the diffidence that is usual with such people & did not seem to expect that he shd be believed He showed S[outhey] a perfectly mad poem called Jerusalem Oxford Street is in Jerusalem

No more severe intelligence test could be devised than the casual introduction of Jerusalem at afternoon tea, and some such topographical detail is as much as the startled guest would be likely to carry away

Nearly twenty years later Southey described this visit to Caroline Bowles, who had been interested by Cunningham's Life of Blake

I have nothing of Blake's but his designs for Blair's Grave, which were published with the poem His still stranger designs for his own compositions in verse were not ready for sale when I saw him, nor did I ever hear that they were so Much as he is to be admired, he was at that time so evidently insane, that the predominant feeling in conversing with him, or even looking at him, could only be sorrow and compassion His wife partook of his insanity in the same way (but more happily) as Taylor the pagan's wife caught her husband's paganism And there are always crazy people enough in the world to feed and foster such craziness as his My old acquaintance William Owen, now Owen Pugh, who for love of his native tongue, composed a most laborious Welsh Dictionary, without the slightest remuneration for his labour, when he was in straitened circumstances, and has, since he became rich, translated Paradise Lost into Welsh verse, found out Blake after the death of Joanna Southcote, one of whose four-and-twenty elders he was Poor Owen found everything which he wished to find in the Bardic system, and there he found Blake's notions, and thus Blake and his wife were persuaded that his dreams were old patriarchal truths, long forgotten, and now re-revealed They told me this, and I, who well knew the muddy nature of Owen's head, knew what his opinion upon such a subject was worth I came away from the visit with so sad a feeling that I never repeated it

You could not have delighted in him—his madness was too evident, too fearful It gave his eyes an expression such as you would expect to see in one who was possessed

The last dated entry in the Rossetti MS Book was written a few days later than Crabb Robinson's account of Southey's visit to Blake It is an extract from Bell's Weekly Messenger of 4th August 1811 referring to Peter le Cave, an artist then in Wilton Gaol who declared that Morland had sold many of his paintings as his own

Blake's comment on the paragraph is "It confirms the Suspicion I entertain'd concerning those two I Engraved From for J R Smith—That Morland could not have Painted them, as they were the works of a Correct Mind & no Blurrer" Blake's reference is probably to the "Industrious Cottager" and "The Idle Laundress," engraved by him in 1788

In 1812 Blake exhibited at the fifth and last Exhibition of the "Associated Artists in Water Colour" his "Pitt," "Nelson," and "Canterbury Pilgrims"

Another glimpse of him, as seen through Flaxman's eyes, is given in Crabb Robinson's Diary for 30th January 1815

Flaxman was very chatty and pleasant. He related some curious anecdotes of Sharp the engraver, who seems the ready dupe of any and every religious fanatic & imposter who offers himself. Sharp, tho' deceived by Brothers, became a warm partisan of Joanna Southcott. He endeavoured to make a convert of Blake the engraver, but as Fl judiciously observed, such men as B[lake] are not fond of playing the 2nd fiddle. Hence B[lake] himself a seer of visions & a dreamer of dreams would not do homage to a rival claimant of the privilege of prophecy. B[lake] told F[laxman] that he had had a violent dispute with the Angels on some subject and had driven them away. Excessive pride equally denoted Blake and Bairstow [another seer of visions]

About 1815 Blake gave William Ensom, the engraver, some sittings, as that year Ensom was awarded the silver medal of the Royal Society of Arts for a pen-and-ink portrait of him. This drawing cannot be traced. Tatham told Gilchrist that Blake came to the Antique School at the Royal Academy in 1815 to copy the cast of the Laocoon, and was greeted by Fuseli, then Keeper, with the words "What! you here, Meesther Blake? We ought to come and learn of you, not you of us!" Gilchrist adds "Blake took his place with the students, and exulted over his work, says Mr Tatham, like a young disciple, meeting his old friend Fuseli's congratulations and kind remarks with cheerful, simple joy."

About 1816 we catch sight of him again, calling on Isaac D'Israeli's friend, the Rev Thomas Dibdin, who gives an account of the visit in his Reminiscences of a Literary Life pupil of no Master, but a most extraordinary artist in his own particular element although I believe he professed to have been a pupil of Flaxman and Fuseli—artists, as opposite in all respects as a chaste severity differs from a wild exuberance of style I soon found the amiable but illusory Blake far beyond my ken or sight In an instant he is in his “third heaven”—flapped by the wings of seraphs, such as his own genius only could shape, and his own pencil embody The immediate subject of our discussion—and for which indeed he professed to have in some measure visited me—was “the minor poems of Milton” Never were such “dreamings” poured forth as were poured forth by my original visitor—his stature mean, his head big and round, his forehead broad and high, his eyes blue, large and lambent—such as my friend Mr Phillips has represented him upon his imperishable canvas

“What thank you, Mr Blake, of Fuseli’s Lycidas—asleep, beneath the opening eyelid of the morn?” “I don’t remember it!” “Pray see it, and examine it carefully It seems to me to be the pencil of poetry employed to give intelligence and expression to the pen of the poet”—or words to this effect were, I think pronounced I learnt afterwards that my Visitor had seen it—but thought it “too tame”, tameness from Fuseli! I told Mr Blake that our common friend, Mr Masquerier, had induced me to purchase his “Songs of Innocence”, and that I had no disposition to “repent my bargain” This extraordinary man sometimes—but in good sooth very rarely—reached the sublime, but the sublime and the grotesque seemed, somehow or the other, to be for ever amalgamated in his imagination, and the choice or result was necessarily doubtful

Dibdin had originally intended to give a much longer account of Blake’s work, and asked Isaac D’Israeli to lend him the designs in his possession D’Israeli refused on the ground that he had too many to send, a hundred and sixty, and that in any case Blake’s drawings baffled description Some critics have supposed that D’Israeli’s reply indicated a large and valuable collection, still unknown, but it seems clear that he was only referring to the copies of the symbolic books in his possession

Meagre as these references are they suggest that Blake had entered on the period of tranquil acceptance of his fate, which, from all accounts, distinguished his latter years He was living in obscurity, and even in old age he was never patent to the public eye, like Lawrence, Fuseli, or Flaxman William Paulet Carey, writing in 1817 of his designs for the Grave, says

I never had the good fortune to see him, and so entire is the uncertainty, in which he is involved, that after many inquiries, I meet with

some in doubt whether he is still in existence. But I have accidentally learned from a Lady, since I commenced these remarks, that he is, certainly, now a resident in London. I have, however, heard enough to warrant my belief that his professional encouragement has been very limited, compared with his powers.

The records of Blake's work during these years are an additional warrant to this belief, and it is difficult to see how he managed to support himself and his wife. It is possible that other drawings or notes of commissions may be found which will make his position more explicable. So far as present information goes it seems clear that he was sometimes in actual want. The account with Butts shows a total of £339 5s 6d for 1805-1810, the average for 1807-1810 being higher than for the two previous years. No receipts have been preserved later than 1810, but as none exists before 1805, although Blake had then been working for Butts for some years, it is probable that a further account was opened. Kirkup's letters suggest that Tommy Butts continued to be Blake's pupil. Captain Butts believed his grandfather to have been a steady purchaser of Blake's work for thirty years, and Mr Butts certainly gave further commissions as the designs for "L'Allegro" and "Il Penseroso," executed about 1816, were his property. Samuel Palmer's eulogy of Butts in the letter to William Abercrombie, part of which has been already quoted, confirms this view. Palmer writes

Were I illustrating the book, my great object would be some likeness of Mr Butts—through his son Captain Butts, if he could be found—because the father for years stood between the greatest designer in England & the workhouse, that designer being, of all men whom I ever knew, the most practically sane, steady, frugal and industrious.

For the rest, the unpublished engraving of Earl Spencer after the portrait by Phillips may have been executed in 1811, as a proof in the Print Room is water-marked with that year. The smaller engraving of the Canterbury Pilgrims was published in 1812. A relief-etching, similar in subject to that on the first page of America, is dated 1813. Copies of several of the Illuminated Books were issued about 1813-1815. In 1814 he began to engrave plates for Flaxman's Hesiod, which was published in 1817.

Gilchrist

Gilchrist says that Blake did not take Flaxman's recommendation of him to Longmans, publishers of the book, quite in good part as he would have preferred to be recommended as a designer, but he gives no authority for this statement. Flaxman, who had designed some crockery for Josiah Wedgwood, also secured for Blake, about 1815, the task of engraving it for a catalogue, work still less worthy of his powers than the Hesiod, or even than the hand-screens he had refused to paint at Felpham. Some of the plates for Rees' Cyclopaedia were engraved and others both drawn and engraved in 1815 and 1816. A water-colour drawing, "The Judgment of Paris," is dated 1817. The series of twelve designs for "L'Allegro" and "Il Penseroso" are on paper watermarked with the date 1816, and his visit to Dibdin no doubt related to these. His description of his illustrations would therefore have been written in that year. The twelve designs for Paradise Regained were probably executed about the same time.

It has been suggested that an article in the Revue Britannique for 1833 explains the scanty information about Blake's life during these years. The article is headed "Hôpital des Fous à Londres," and purports to describe a visit, the date of which is not mentioned, to Bethlem Hospital, and an interview there with Blake "surnommé le Voyant." Blake, who was under five foot six inches in height, is described as a big pale man who was engaged in drawing the ghost of a flea when the visitor entered, in itself a suspicious circumstance. There are other references to the visionary heads which Blake actually drew for Varley, and to conversations with Moses and Michael Angelo, and an appropriate allusion to "ce pauvre Job." The writer mentions as another interesting inmate Jonathan Martin, brother of John Martin the artist, who set fire to York Minster as a warning to the card-playing and theatre-going clergy of England, but Martin was tried for arson and committed to Bethlem on 13th March 1829, nearly two years after Blake's death. The origin of this article is a paper in the Monthly Magazine for March 1833, entitled "Bits of Biography. Blake, the Vision Seer, and Martin, the York Minster Incendiary." The first part is entirely concerned with Blake and his wife; the second describes describes a visit to Bethlem, where Martin was the most famous of the inmates. By unscrupulously stringing together the two bits of biography the French writer has put Blake into Bethlem, and so created a legend which may now be regarded as completely disproved.

During these years Blake was writing the last of his symbolic books, Jerusalem, The Emanation of the Giant Albion. It is probable that this poem was begun in 1804, as the title-page bears that date, but that the greater part of it was written after the completion of Milton in 1808. Southey saw something of it in 1811, but none of the known copies is printed on paper watermarked earlier than 1818. Five copies are recorded printed in black and uncoloured, and one in orange very beautifully painted with water-colours and gold. This is probably the copy to which Blake refers in his letter to George Cumberland of 12th April 1827: "The last work I produced is a poem entitled Jerusalem, the Emanation of the Giant Albion, but find that to print it will cost my time the amount of Twenty Guineas. One I have Finish'd. It contains 100 Plates, but it is not likely I shall get a Customer for it."

Blake was right, and this copy passed into the hands of Frederick Tatham after Mrs. Blake's death. Two posthumous copies were printed, probably by Tatham. Another coloured copy is said to have been sold to Ruskin, and some fragments, at one time in the British Museum Print Room, may have been part of it, as Ruskin had a curious craze for cutting up illuminated MSS.

Jerusalem is dedicated "SHEEP To the Public, GOATS," Blake maintaining the distinction he had drawn years before in The Marriage of Heaven and Hell.

Thus one portion of being is the Prolific, the other the Devouring; to the Devourer it seems as if the producer was in his chains, but it is not so, he only takes portions of existence and fancies that the whole

Note: Jesus Christ did not wish to unite, but to separate them, as in the Parable of sheep and goats! & he says "I came not to send Peace, but a Sword."

The reference to Felpham in the first sentence, "After my three years slumber on the banks of the ocean, I again display My Giant Forms to the Public" is additional evidence evidence that Blake began to write Jerusalem after his return to London. Aggressive in his claim as an artist, he does not pose as a slighted poet, though his paintings had clearly excited far more attention than his lyrics or symbolic books.

My former Giants & Fairies having recieved the highest reward possible, the love and friendship of those with whom to be connected is to be blessed, I cannot doubt that this more consolidated & extended Work will be as kindly recieved

It would seem that the fitness of the audience had made up for their being but very few, and these few can then have numbered two or three at most beyond the little circle of his personal friends.

Jerusalem, the longest of the symbolic books, is indeed a Giant Form, ungainly, amorphous. Who can listen to his terrific voice without confusion and alarm? Who will not regret the sweet and ordered accents of the lyric Fairies? Had Blake left us more of these perhaps they would have said for him all that he needed to say, and the giants might have been reserved for the eye curious in technique and psychology, as colossal rough drafts which could convey their full meaning only to the writer. But, fairies failing, those who would understand Blake's mystic gospel must listen also to this giant.

The inscription at the head of Chapter I, ΜΟΥΟΣ ὁ Θεοῦς [sic], is anticipated by the statement in the dedication that Jesus is "the God of Fire and Lord of Love"

"The Spirit of Jesus is continual forgiveness of Sin he who waits to be righteous before he enters into the Saviour's kingdom, the Divine Body, will never enter there." A fairy's voice is heard for a moment telling of Jesus as the God of Fire

Again he speaks in thunder and in fire!
Thunder of Thought, & flames of fierce desire,
Even from the depths of Hell his voice I hear Within the unfathom'd caverns of my Ear

The Dedication ends with the note already quoted, on the measure in which the poem is written.

As Milton records Blake's rebellion against the conditions of his life at Felpham, so the substance of Jerusalem is affected by the agony of mind he had suffered in awaiting his trial for high treason. This experience had impressed on him the cruelty of men to men, their readiness to accuse and judge, he saw more clearly than before that freedom is only attainable through imaginative understanding and mutual forgiveness. The theme of Jerusalem is stated in the first lines

Of the Sleep of Ulro¹ and of the passage through Eternal Death¹ and of the awaking to Eternal Life

Jesus through the words of Blake appeals to Albion, the Eternal Man, to awaken from his deathful sleep, and hide no longer his emanation, Jerusalem, spiritual freedom, which is the outcome of imagination

"I am not a God afar off, I am a brother and friend, Within your bosoms I reside, and you reside in me Lo! we are One, forgiving all Evil, Not seeking recompense "

But the Man denies spiritual freedom, and puts reason and moral law in her place

"Jerusalem is not! her daughters are indefinite
By demonstration man alone can live, and not by faith

* * * *

here will I build my Laws of Moral Virtue Humanity shall be no more, but war & prunedom & victory!"

Blake, seeing that without spiritual freedom and imagination learning has become abstract and religion narrow, asks for divine inspiration that he may describe the building of Golgonooza, the City of Art, and also the present state of misery brought about by the man's inhumanity

Trembling I sit day and night, my friends are astonish'd at me,
Yet they forgive my wanderings I rest not from my great task!
To open the Eternal Worlds, to open the immortal Eyes
Of Man inwards into the Worlds of Thought, into Eternity Ever expanding in the Bosom of God, the Human Imagination
O Saviour pour upon me thy Spirit of meekness & love!
Annihilate the Selfhood in me be thou all my life!

Jerusalem in her misery becomes the companion of Vala, Nature, and Los, the Poet, embodied by Blake himself, hears her lamentations. Los, whose name in Eternity

Eternity is Urthona, Spirit, is divided from his Spectre, Reason, who is described later in the poem

The Spectre is the Reasoning Power in Man, & when separated From Imagination and closing itself as in steel in a Ratio
Of the Things of Memory, It thence frames Laws & Moralities
To destroy Imagination, the Divine Body, by Martyrdoms & Wars

Reason tries to destroy the Poet, and then to terrify him by his pessimism and his gibes, but Los refuses to be alarmed

"Comfort thyself in my strength, the time will arrive
When all Albion's injuries shall cease, and when we shall Embrace him, tenfold bright, rising from his tomb in immortality
They have divided themselves by Wrath, they must be united by Pity, let us therefore take example & warning, O my Spectre O that I could abstain from Wrath! O that the Lamb
Of God would look upon me and pity me in my fury,
In anguish of regeneration, in terrors of self annihilation "

The last words sound a personal note in reply to the Spectre's taunt which, it would seem, refers to the neglect of Blake as an artist, and to the Cromek and Stothard controversies

Los recognizes the Spectre as his own "Pride & Self-righteousness", he will labour in hope, exposing error

They take the Two Contraries which are call'd Qualities, with
Every Substance is clothed they name them Good & Evil,
From them they make an Abstract, which is a Negation
Not only of the Substance from which it is derived,
A murderer of its own Body, but also a murderer
Of every Divine Member it is the Reasoning Power,
An Abstract objecting power that Negatives every thing
This is the Spectre of Man, the Holy Reasoning Power,
And in its Holiness is closed the Abomination of Desolation

Los, therefore, compels the unwilling Spectre to labour with him

"I must Create a System or be enslav'd by another Man's
I will not Reason & Compare my business is to Create "

Then follows a description of how Los "Striving with Systems to deliver Individuals from those Systems," builds the Eternal City of Art, Golgonooza, which has four gates, and in which all things are fourfold Outside Golgonooza lies lies the world of materialistic science, with its symbols, the Cave, the Rock, the Tree, and so forth

And all that has existed in the space of six thousand years,
Permanent & not lost, not lost nor vanish'd, & every little act, Word, work & wish that has existed all remaining still

* * * *

For every thing exists & not one sigh nor smile nor tear,
One hair nor particle of dust, not one can pass away

Blake, appalled by the condition of the material world, makes another appeal for inspiration

I see the Four-fold Man, The Humanity in deadly sleep
And its fallen Emanation, The Spectre & its cruel Shadow
I see the Past, Present & Future existing all at once Before me O Divine Spirit, sustain me on thy wings,
That I may awake Albion from his long & cold repose,
For Bacon & Newton, sheath'd in dismal steel, their terrors hang Like iron scourges over Albion Reasonings like vast Serpents Infold around my limbs, bruising my minute articulations

I turn my eyes to the Schools & Universities of Europe
And there behold the Loom of Locke, where Woof rages dire, Wash'd by the Water-wheels of Newton, black the cloth
In heavy wreaths folds over every Nation cruel Works,
Of many Wheels I view, wheel without wheel, with cogs tyrannic Moving by compulsion each other, not as those in Eden, which,
Wheel within Wheel, in freedom revolve in harmony & peace

After contemplating the existing misery Blake recalls that Los is not only the builder of the City of Art, but also the Guardian of the World Memory

All things acted on Earth are seen in the bright Sculptures of Los's Halls, & every Age renews its powers from these Works With every pathetic story possible to happen from Hate or Wayward Love, & every sorrow & distress is carved here, Every Affinity of Parents, Marriages & Friendships are here
In all their various combinations wrought with wondrous Art,
All that can happen to Man in his pilgrimage of seventy years
Such is the Divine Written Law of Horeb & Sinai,
And such the Holy Gospel of Mount Olivet & Calvary

The poet dominates his reason lest he should destroy Entharmon, Inspiration, but at the same time makes use of reason to withstand the seductions of the Daughters of Albion, unimaginative and therefore false conceptions of beauty Hand and Hyle, Sons of Albion, the rationalist and the bad artist, deny the spiritual freedom of imagination

"Cast, Cast ye Jerusalem forth! The Shadow of delusions!
The Harlot daughter! Mother of pity and dishonourable forgiveness!
Our Father Albion's sin and shame!"

They proclaim Vala, Nature, their Mother The first chapter ends with the mutual reproaches of Jerusalem and Vala, who now see that they are incompatible with one another, and Albion blames them both for his fall from eternity He seeks salvation in hypocrisy "All is Eternal Death unless you can weave a chaste Body over an unchaste Mind!"

He rejects Jerusalem as sin, and seizes Vala's Veil, Matter, that the souls of men may be ensnared He only knows God "wide separated from the Human Soul," the god of vengeance and moral law Then, suddenly he realizes that he has fallen from Eternity because he has forsaken freedom

"O Human Imagination, O Divine Body I have Crucified, I have turned my back upon thee into the Wastes of Moral Law "

He dies into the World of Generation asking for forgiveness, and the daughters of Beulah, the region below eternity where Albion had been sleeping, the first stage in his fall, utter their lamentation

"Why did you take Vengeance, O ye Sons of the mighty Albion, Planting these Oaken Groves, Erecting these Dragon Temples?
Injury the Lord heals, but Vengeance cannot be healed
As the Sons of Albion have done to Luvah, so they have in him Done to the Divine Lord & Saviour who suffers with those that suffer,

For not one sparrow can suffer & the whole Universe not suffer also In all its Regions, & its Father & Saviour not pity and weep But Vengeance is the destroyer of Grace & Repentance in the bosom

Of the Injurer, in which the Divine Lamb is cruelly slain Descend, O Lamb of God, & take away the imputation of Sin
By the Creation of States & the deliverance of Individuals Evermore

Amen "

The preface to Chapter II is dedicated To the Jews
The first paragraph is elucidated by the description of an aged aged patriarch in A Vision of the Last Judgment "He is Albion, our Ancestor, patriarch of the Atlantic Continent, whose History preceded that of the Hebrews & in whose Sleep, or Chaos, Creation began " After the fall of Albion, the false religion of sacrifice, which Blake always calls "Druid," was common to the whole earth, but these Druids had none the less handed down the tradition "that Man anciently contain'd in his mighty limbs all things in Heaven & Earth "

The first six verses of the lyric describe the golden age of innocence, when Jerusalem, Freedom, was familiar to all

She walks upon our meadows green,
The Lamb of God walks by her side,
And every English Child is seen Children of Jesus & his Bride

Then comes the age of experience when Satan, Error, rules for a time though he cannot gain a final victory

He wither'd up the Human Form
By laws of sacrifice for sin,
Till it became a Mortal Worm,
But O' translucent all within

The Divine Vision still was seen, Still was the Human Form Divine,
Weeping in weak & mortal clay,
O Jesus, still the Form was thine

And thine the Human Face, & thine
The Human Hands & Feet & Breath, Entering thro' the Gates of Birth
And passing thro' the Gates of Death

And O thou Lamb of God, whom I Slew in my dark self-righteous pride,
Art thou return'd to Albion's Land?
And is Jerusalem thy Bride?

Come to my arms & never more
Depart, but dwell for ever here
Create my Spirit to thy Love
Subdue my Spectre to thy Fear

Spectre of Albion! warlike Fiend!
In clouds of blood & ruin roll'd,
I here reclaim thee as my own,
My Self-hood! Satan! arm'd in gold!

Is this thy soft Family-Love,
Thy cruel Patriarchal pride,
Planting thy Family alone,
Destroying all the World beside?

A man's worst enemies are those Of his own house & family,
And he who makes his law a curse,
By his own law shall surely die

In my Exchanges every Land Shall walk, & mine in every Land,
Mutual shall build Jerusalem,
Both heart in heart & hand in hand

In the last verses Blake shows that he regarded exclusive family love and patriotism as a form of the selfhood. The last verse but one refers back to the lines in Albion's lament of the previous chapter

"O my children,
I have educated you in the crucifying cruelties of Demonstration, Till you have assum'd the Providence of God & slain your Father "

Chapter II opens with Albion's conviction of sin, which he hardens into a doctrine dividing men against each other. The Divine Vision appears and announces that Albion's sleep of death must last until the hidden Satan, the Secret Error, is exposed. Then "two immortal forms" leave Albion, the spectre and emanation of Los. As they escape they give with slight alterations the same account of Albion as Ahania had given in Vala of her vision of the "Dark'ning Man." Since they have fled from Error they are now reunited with Los, the Poet, who tries to comprehend the degradation of Albion, but error is still hidden from him, although he sees that

Every Universal Form was become barren mountains of Moral Virtue, and every Minute Particular harden'd into grains of sand,
And all the tendernesses of the soul cast forth as filth & mire

Now that Albion has fallen into the World of Generation, his Spectre, Chaos, Satan, who as Error, is "the Great Selfhood" and represents memory as opposed to imagination, addressed him in the language of materialism

"I am your Rational Power, O Albion, & that Human Form
You call Divine is but a Worm seventy inches long

That

That creeps forth in a night & is dried in the morning sun,
 In fortuitous concourse of memorys accumulated & lost
 It plows the Earth in its own conceit, it overwhelms the Hills Beneath its winding labyrinths, till a stone of the brook, Stops it in midst of its pride among its hills & rivers "

Vala, Nature, appears from Chaos, now that Albion is in the material world she, and not Jerusalem, is his emanation. She obscures the Divine Vision for Albion, claiming that she alone is Beauty, and that the Eternal, the Imaginative Human form is her own creation. Los is appalled at the domination of Nature over Man.

"There is a Throne in every Man, it is the Throne of God,
 This, Woman has claim'd as her own, & Man no more!
 Albion is the Tabernacle of Vala & her Temple,
 And not the Tabernacle & Temple of the Most High "

As in Vala the Divine hand sets two limits of opacity and contraction for created man in the world of generation, but in Jerusalem the Divine voice also announces the creation of States, through which the individual passes leaving error behind him. Meanwhile the world of generation becomes more and more divided, and illusion is all powerful until the Divine Body, Imagination, shall redeem man. But the fallen Albion, though he has steeled his heart against "Universal Love," is not cut off from eternity, for the Saviour follows him, as in Vala.

Displaying the Eternal Vision, the Divine Similitude,
 In loves and tears of brothers, sisters, sons, fathers and friends,
 Which if Man ceases to behold, he ceases to exist,

Saying "Albion! Our wars are wars of life, & wounds of love
 With intellectual spears, & long winged arrows of thought Mutual in one another's love and wrath all renewing
 We live as One Man, for contracting our infinite senses
 We behold multitude, or expanding, we behold as one,
 As One Man all the Universal Family, and that One Man
 We call Jesus the Christ, and he in us, as we in him
 Live in perfect harmony in Eden, the land of life, Giving, receiving, and forgiving each other's trespasses
 He is the Good shepherd, he is the Lord and master,
 He is the Shepherd of Albion, he is all in all,
 In Eden, in the garden of God, and in heavenly Jerusalem
 If we have offended, forgive us, take no vengeance against us "

But Albion fled from the Divine Vision, seeking a refuge
 in

in the doctrine of Atonement instead of in forgiveness of sins The poet is still his friend

Los said to Albion "Whither fleest thou?" Albion reply'd

"I die! I go to Eternal Death! the shades of death Hover within me & beneath, and spreading themselves outside
Like rocky clouds, build me a gloomy monument of woe
Will none accompany me in my death, or be a Ransom for me
In that dark Valley? I have girded round my cloke, and on my feet Bound these black shoes of death, & on my hands, death's iron gloves

God hath forsaken me & my friends are become a burden,
A weariness to me, & the human footstep is a terror to me "

Los answered troubled, and his soul was rent in twain
"Must the Wise die for an Atonement? does Mercy endure Atonement?"

No! It is Moral Severity & destroys Mercy in its Victim "

But Blake recalls for his own comfort that, even in the world of generation, there is a window opening on Eternity, of which the Fairy had told him

There is a Grain of Sand in Lambeth that Satan cannot find, Nor can his Watch Fiends find it, 'tis translucent & has many Angles,

But he who finds it will find Oothoon's palace, for within Opening into Beulah, every angle is a lovely heaven
But should the Watch Fiends find it, they would call it Sin
And lay its Heavens & their inhabitants in blood of punishment

Los continues to remonstrate vainly with Albion, and then, despite his own doubt and despair, implores the other Zoas, "Urizen cold & scientific, Luvah pitying & weeping, Tharmas indolent & sullen," to help him in the eternal Man, describing in a long and vehement speech the evil and degradation and cruelty and error which have resulted from his fall They respond to the appeal of Los and together they try to bear Albion back to eternity, but they cannot succeed against his will they are winged with vision and imagination, but the "Starry Wheels" of Albion, reason and logic, roll him back into the material world in spite of their efforts to raise him

Albion again abandons hope, and Jerusalem, his emanation, like Ololon in Milton, descends to earth in order order to save him, while the Daughters of Beulah implore the Lamb of God to come and take away the remembrance of sin

The third chapter is dedicated "To the Deists," self-righteous believers in natural virtue, who accuse religious men like Whitefield of hypocrisy because they confess their sins, promoters of warfare, who will not understand that "the Glory of Christianity is To Conquer by Forgiveness" The dedication ends with the second half of the "Monk of Charlemaine" from the MS Book The monk is the "image of his Lord," who is slain by those who have forcibly divided the moral law from the gospel of forgiveness

Early in Chapter III Blake defines Jerusalem in her universal relation to men

In Great Eternity every particular Form gives forth or Emanates
Its own peculiar Light, & the Form is the Divine Vision
And the Light is his Garment, This is Jerusalem in every Man,
A Tent & Tabernacle of Mutual Forgiveness

But men are still the victims of passion unreleased by imagination, which ensures mutual forgiveness, they are bound by the iron chains of Sexual Love, and the "cold constrictive Spectre" of Reason imposes doubt instead of faith As in Vala and Milton the Seven Eyes of God are appointed to watch, the first six representing the states through which man must pass before he is prepared for the seventh, Jesus, the recognition of truth The Eighth, the "Shadowy Eighth" of Milton, the eternal individuality of Man, is lost in the forest of error and does not answer to the call The Living Creatures, the Four Zoas, wage war against the indefinite, the abstract

He who would do good to another must do it in Minute Particulars
General Good is the plea of the scoundrel, hypocrite & flatterer,
For Art & Science cannot exist but in minutely organized Particulars
And not in generalizing Demonstrations of the Rational Power
The Infinite alone resides in Definite & Determinate Identity, Establishment of Truth depends on destruction of Falsehood continually,

On Circumcision, not on Virginitv, O Reasoners of Albion!

Circumcision, Blake's symbol for sacrifice of the selfhood, must take the place of Virginitv, abstinence and unnatural natural repression Los, the Poet, takes comfort in the thought that man is cast in the image of the divine Infant

He who is an Infant and whose Cradle is a Manger Knoweth the Infant sorrow, whence it came and where it goeth
 And who weave it a Cradle of the grass that withereth away
 This World is all a Cradle for the erred wandering Phantom, Rock'd by Year, Month, Day & Hour, and every two Moments Between dwells a Daughter of Beulah to feed the Human Vegetable

Los here and elsewhere deplores the dominance of the Female Will, the Moral Law, which, like freedom and inspiration on the higher plane and nature on the lower, is represented as feminine Jerusalem, a captive in the Mills of reason, is mad with despair, and Vala, Nature and materialistic religion, triumphs over her rival Nevertheless Jerusalem often beheld the Divine Vision and said

O Lord & Saviour, have the Gods of the Heathen pierced thee,
 Or hast thou been pierced in the House of thy Friends?
 Art thou alive, & livest thou for evermore? or art thou Nought but a delusive shadow, a thought that liveth not?
 Babel mocks, saying there is no God nor Son of God,
 That thou, O Human Imagination, O Divine Body, art all
 A delusion, but I know thee, O Lord, where thou arisest upon My weary eyes, even in this dungeon & this iron mill
 The Stars of Albion cruel rise, thou bindest to sweet influences, For thou also sufferest with me, altho' I behold thee not,
 And altho' I sin & blaspheme thy holy name thou pitiest me Because thou knowest I am deluded by the turning mills
 And by these visions of pity & love because of Albion's death

But she is comforted by a visionary knowledge that the birth of the Divine Child was itself an occasion for forgiveness She hears Mary appeal to Joseph in her own name, as a sign that she also will be forgiven and reinstated, fallen though she be.

Art thou more pure
 Than thy Maker who forgiveth Sins & Calls again Her that is Lost?

Blake, in A Vision of the Last Judgment, had included the Virgin Mary among the "innocently gay and thoughtless, not being among the condemn'd because ignorant of crime in the midst of a corrupted Age" He believed that Jesus was conceived by the Holy Ghost, not in a miraculous sense, but because Mary, like Oothoon in Visions of the Daughters

Daughters of Albion, had yielded to an instinct pure in itself

Jerusalem receives the Divine Child from Mary at his birth, but again despairs at the crucifixion

"Shall Albion arise? I know he shall arise at the Last Day!
I know that in my flesh I shall see God, but Emanations Are weak, they know not whence they are nor whither tend "

Jesus replied "I am the Resurrection & the Life
I die & pass the limits of possibility as it appears To individual perception
Come now with me into the villages, walk thro' all the cities, Tho' thou art taken to prison & judgment, starved in the streets,
I will command the cloud to give thee food & the hard rock
To flow with milk & wine, tho' thou seest me not a season,
Even a long season & a hard journey & a howling wilderness,
Tho' Vala's cloud hide thee & Luvah's fires follow thee,
Only believe & trust in me Lo, I am always with thee!"

But in the meantime the world is ruled by Vala, Nature, and the Spectre, Reason, in the false union which does not synthesize the contraries and is always called by Blake hermaphroditic as opposed to androgynous

The description of the industrial revolution is repeated from Vala The Eternal Man will not hear the voice of the poet, but Los continues his work, creating the prophets to defeat the kings of the material world, and he is aided by "all the Gentle Souls Who guide the great Wine-press of Love," among them Fénelon, Mme Guyon, Saint Theresa, Whitefield, and Hervey The chapter ends with another cry from Blake for inspiration, while he ponders over all that has happened in the world of time and space

The fourth chapter is dedicated "To the Christians " Blake contrasts the doctrines of the Evangelicals with his own religion of art in forcible prose This passage must be quoted in full, and needs no comment

We are told to abstain from fleshly desires that we may lose no time from the Work of the Lord Every moment lost is a moment that cannot be redeemed, every pleasure that intermingles with the duty of our our station is a folly unredeemable, & is planted like the seed of a wild flower among our wheat All the tortures of repentance are tortures of self-reproach on account of our leaving the Divine Harvest to the Enemy the struggles of intanglement with incoherent roots I know of no other Christianity and of no other Gospel than the liberty both of body & mind to exercise the Divine Arts of Imagination, Imagination, the real & eternal World of which this Vegetable Universe is but a faint shadow, & in which we shall live in our Eternal or Imaginative Bodies when these Vegetable Mortal Bodies are no more The Apostles knew of no other Gospel What were all their spiritual gifts? What is the Divine Spirit? is the Holy Ghost any other than an Intellectual Fountain? What is the Harvest of the Gospel & its Labours? What is that Talent which is a curse to hide? What are the Treasures of Heaven which we are to lay up for ourselves, are they any other than Mental Studies & Performances? What are all the Gifts of the Gospel, are they not all Mental Gifts? Is God a Spirit who must be worshipped in Spirit & in Truth, and are not the Gifts of the Spirit Every-thing to Man? O ye Religious, discountenance every one among you who shall pretend to despise Art & Science! I call upon you in the name of Jesus! What is the life of Man but Art & Science? is it Meat & Drink? is not the Body more than Raiment? What is Mortality but the things relating to the Body which Dies? What is Immortality but the things relating to the Spirit which Lives Eternally? What is the Joy of Heaven but Improvement in the things of the Spirit? What are the Pains of Hell but Ignorance, Bodily Lust, Idleness & devastation of the things of the Spirit? Answer this to yourselves, & expel from among you those who pretend to despise the labours of Art & Science, which alone are the labours of the Gospel Is not this plain & manifest to the thought? Can you think at all & not pronounce heartily That to Labour in Knowledge is to Build up Jerusalem, and to Despise Knowledge is to Despise Jerusalem & her Builders And remember He who despises & mocks a Mental Gift in another, calling it pride & selfishness & sin, mocks Jesus the giver of every Mental Gift, which always appear to the ignorance-loving Hypocrite as Sins, but that which is a Sin in the sight of cruel Man is not so in the sight of our kind God Let every Christian, as much as in him lies, engage himself openly & publicly before all the World in some Mental pursuit for the Building up of Jerusalem

Some of the sentences surrounding the Laocoön carry further the idea that the pursuit of art leads to freedom of spirit and imagination

A Poet, a Painter, a Musician, an Architect the Man Or Woman who is not one of these is not a Christian

You must leave Fathers & Mothers & Houses & Lands if they stand in the way of Art

Prayer is the Study of Art Praise is the Practise of Art,

Fasting

Fasting &c , all relate to Art
The Outward Ceremony is Antichrist

* * * *

Jesus & his Apostles & Disciples were all Artists Their Works were destroy'd by the Seven Angels of the Seven Churches in Asia, Antichrist Science

Then Blake tells how he beheld a vision of the fiery wheel of religion, and was told that "Jesus died because he strove against the current of this wheel " He was himself bidden to follow the example of Christ, the Man of Imagination, and not that of the Pharisees, who were led astray by the self-righteous spectre of reason

"Go therefore, cast out devils in Christ's name, Heal thou the sick of spiritual disease,
Pity the evil, for thou art not sent
To smite with terror & with punishments
Those that are sick, like to the Pharisees Crucifying & encompassing sea & land
For proselytes to tyranny & wrath,
But to the Publicans & Harlots go,
Teach them True Happiness, but let no curse
Go forth out of thy mouth to blight their peace,
For Hell is open'd to Heaven, thine eyes beheld
The dungeons burst & the Prisoners set free "

Then follows an appeal to England to waken at the call of spiritual freedom

With the beginning of the fourth chapter things are at their worst The "Sleeping Humanity" of Albion, the shadowy eighth, who cannot awaken till the seventh state, the recognition of truth, has been passed through, is attacked, but Los protects the eternal individuality of Man Jerusalem is in utter despair.

Encompass'd by the frozen Net and by the rooted Tree
I walk weeping in pangs of a Mother's torment for her Children
I walk in affliction I am a worm and no living soul!
A worm going to eternal torment, rais'd up in a night
To an eternal night of pain, lost! lost! lost! for ever!

Vala, Nature, also laments because she wrongly believes that the awakening of the Man will mean the death of Luvah, Passion, whose emanation she is she does not understand that then the Zoas will live as the servants of man, and strife between him and them will cease False

False ideals hold in subjection the reasoner and the artist, threatening freedom and preventing the recognition of truth. On plate 81 these false ideals are represented by a group of female figures, one of whom points to lines written in reversed writing

In Heaven the only Art of living Is Forgetting & Forgiving Especially to the Female

But if you on Earth Forgive
You shall not find where to Live

Enitharmon, Inspiration, is again separated from Los, the Poet, and his efforts are, therefore, wasted. The Spectre, Reason, rejoices at the division, but his triumph is short-lived, for now the Antichrist appears, the covering cherub, who had once guarded the truth but had been mistaken for it, is known as false doctrine. Error is revealed, and can, therefore, be destroyed. The poet, though still toiling in darkness, begins to perceive and proclaim the truth

It is easier to forgive an Enemy than to forgive a Friend
The man who permits you to injure him deserves your vengeance
He also will receive it, go Spectre! obey my most secret desire Which thou knowest without my speaking. Go to these Friends of Righteousness,

Tell them to obey their Humanities & not pretend Holiness
When they are murderers, as far as my Hammer & Anvil permit Go, tell them that the Worship of God is honouring his gifts
In other men & loving the greatest men best, each according To his Genius which is the Holy Ghost in Man, there is no other God than that God who is the intellectual fountain of Humanity
He who envies or calumniates, which is murder & cruelty, Murders the Holy-one. Go, tell them this, & overthrow their cup,
Their bread, their altar-table, their incense & their oath,
Their marriage & their baptism, their burial & consecration
I have tried to make friends by corporal gifts but have only Made enemies. I never made friends but by spiritual gifts,
By severe contentions of friendship & the burning fire of thought
He who would see the Divinity must see him in his Children, One first, in friendship & love, then a Divine Family, & in the midst

Jesus will appear, so he who wishes to see a Vision, a perfect Whole, Must see it in its Minute Particulars, Organized & not as thou,
O Fiend of Righteousness, pretendest, thine is a Disorganized
And snowy cloud, brooder of tempests & destructive War.

You smile with pomp & rigor, you talk of benevolence & virtue,
I act

I act with benevolence & Virtue & get murder'd time after time
 You accumulate Particulars & murder by analyzing, that you May take the aggregate, & you call the aggregate Moral Law,
 And you call that swell'd & bloated Form a Minute Particular,
 But General Forms have their vitality in particulars & every Particular is a Man, a Divine Member of the Divine Jesus

Los dominates the Spectre, and confines reason to his proper functions, declaring

"I care not whether a Man is Good or Evil, all that I care
 Is whether he is a Wise Man or a Fool Go, put off Holiness
 And put on Intellect, or my thundr'ous Hammer shall drive thee
 To wrath which thou condemnest, till thou obey my voice "

Entharmon, Inspiration, fears that when the Man is no longer asleep in the world of generation her task will be over, but Los reassures her, their division will be at an end but she will not perish The awakening of Albion is not a cause of terror

"Fear not, my Sons, this Waking Death, he is become One with me Behold him here! We shall not Die! we shall be united in Jesus Will you suffer this Satan, this Body of Doubt that Seems but Is Not,
 To occupy the very threshold of Eternal Life! if Bacon, Newton, Locke
 Deny a Conscience in Man & the Communion of Saints & Angels, Contemning the Divine Vision & Fruition, Worshipping the Deus
 Of the Heathen, The God of This World, & the Goddess Nature, Mystery, Babylon the Great, The Druid Dragon & hidden Harlot, Is it not that Signal of the Morning which was told us in the Beginning?"

Britannia, the emotional emanation of Albion, is the first to awake her lament for her errors rouses him, and in anger he compels the three Zoas, Luvah, Urizen, and Tharmas, the Emotions, the Reason, and the Senses, to serve him and fulfil their true functions But the fourth Zoa, Los, the Poet, is honoured above the rest

Urthona he beheld, mighty labouring at His Anvil, in the Great Spectre Los unwearied labouring & weeping
 Therefore the Sons of Eden praise Urthona's Spectre in songs, Because he kept the Divine Vision in time of trouble

Then Jesus himself appears to Albion in the similitude of Los, and tells him that his own death is necessary if the eternal man is to live. Albion is perplexed—"Cannot Man

Man exist without Mysterious Offering of self for Another? is this Friendship & Brotherhood?"

Jesus said "Wouldest thou love one who never died
For thee, or ever die for one who had not died for thee?
And if God dieth not for Man & giveth not himself Eternally for Man, Man could not exist, for Man is Love
As God is Love every kindness to another is a little Death
In the Divine Image, nor can Man exist but by Brotherhood "

The covering cherub, the cloud of error, divides them Albion forgets himself in terror at the danger for his Friend, throwing himself into the Furnaces of affliction, and immediately

All was a Vision, all a Dream the Furnaces became Fountains of Living Waters flowing from the Humanity Divine
And all the Cities of Albion rose from their Slumbers, and All
The Sons & Daughters of Albion on soft clouds, waking from Sleep Soon all around remote the Heavens burnt with flaming fires,
And Urizen & Luvah & Tharmas & Urthona arose into Albion's Bosom Then Albion stood before Jesus in the Clouds
Of Heaven, Fourfold among the Visions of God in Eternity

Then the eternal man awakens Spiritual Freedom

"Awake, Awake, Jerusalem! O lovely Emanation of Albion, Awake and overspread all Nations as in Ancient Time,
For lo! the Night of Death is past and the Eternal Day Appears upon our Hills Awake, Jerusalem, and come away!"

He takes his bow, which appears as fourfold, a bow in the hands of each of the four Zoas, and Error is annihilated
Then the truth of both science and art is revealed Bacon, Newton, and Locke are the companions in eternity of Milton, Shakespeare, and Chaucer

The end of Jerusalem is obscure, Though the old earth has passed away, the new heaven has its complement in a new earth Blake, it would seem, conceives a golden age of regeneration, an imaginative creation which involves no Fall The Four Living Creatures are described as "going forward, forward irresistible from Eternity to Eternity"

And they conversed together in Visionary forms dramatic which bright

Redounded from their Tongues in thunderous majesty, in Visions
In new Expanses, creating exemplars of Memory and of Intellect, Creating Space, Creating Time, according to the wonders Divine

Of Human Imagination throughout all the Three Regions immense Of Childhood, Manhood & Old Age, & the all tremendous unfathomable Non Ens

Of Death was seen in regenerations terrific or complacent, varying According to the subject of discourse, & every Word & every Character

Was Human according to the Expansion or Contraction, the Translucence or

Opakeness of Nervous fibres such was the variation of Time & Space

Which vary according as the Organs of Perception vary,

Every man has become Fourfold, Human even Nature herself, "the Wondrous Serpent," is "Humanized" Nothing save error is destroyed, as Blake had declared earlier in the poem "Everything has as much right to Eternal Life as God, who is the Servant of Man"

The new order is hailed by a great cry from all the earth, from the men of all nations, and from those who had laboured to build the city of art in the shadowy world of generation all things, united by the bond of spiritual freedom, enjoy their own individualities without let or restraint

All Human Forms identified, even Tree, Metal, Earth & Stone all Human Forms identified, living, giving forth & returning wearied Into the Planetary lives of Years, Months, Days & Hours, reposing,
And then Awakening into his Bosom in the Life of Immortality

And I heard the Name of their Emanations they are named Jerusalem

This imperfect account only aims at giving the gist of Jerusalem To summarize the poem adequately within reasonable limits is impossible as the "minute particulars" require, though they frequently resist, a detailed interpretation The number of proper names, both of places and of persons, scriptural, mythological, and modern, used as symbols, causes much confusion Instead of contenting himself with a few striking allusions and personifications Blake's study of Biblical prophecy has resulted in an ugly and hybrid shorthand For instance, the haunting effects of his trial are shown by the frequent references to Schofield and his comrade, and to the magistrates concerned, as typifying the accuser and the judge of sin Any attempt to deal with this symbolism in a few lines would leave the reader in the same condition of mind as poor Southey. Those who attack the poem itself will be well advised to consult Mr Foster Damon's synopsis, and his commentary with its table of correspondences, but no one should venture on Jerusalem who is not familiar with the other symbolic books. The outline of the poem is indeterminate: there are fewer fine passages of verse than in Vala or Milton, and of these some of the best have been transferred from the former book. These defects may be partly due to age, but it is also probable that Blake's small audience had been interested in the form of the illuminated books rather than their purport, and he had, therefore, failed to receive intelligent criticism and fruitful questioning which would have revealed to himself the depths of his own obscurity, and made it worth while to strive for a clearer expression of his ideas. He admitted in a conversation with Crabb Robinson on 18th February 1826 that during those last years, when he was producing some of his best and most famous work as engraver and draughtsman, he was writing only for his own spiritual relief and no longer even desired readers.

He will not print any more. "I write," he says, "when commanded by the spirits and the moment I have written I see the words fly abt the room in all directions. It is then published & the Spirits can read My M S S [are] of no further use. I have been tempted to burn my M S S but my wife won't let me." "She is right," said I. "You have written these, not from yourself but by a higher order. The M S S are theirs, not your property. You cannot tell what purpose they may answer unforeseen to you." He liked this & said he wd not destroy them.

But Jerusalem shows no abatement of energy or enthusiasm. Blake is still as fearless and uncompromising in his refusal to accept conventional standards and ideals as when he wrote the Marriage of Heaven and Hell. No longer the politician of the French Revolution and America, he is still the unflinching champion of freedom, of spiritual freedom which involves a more complete change of things as they are, or even as most reformers wish them to be, than any political programme. It is noteworthy that Blake criticized Christ's political activities in conversation with Crabb Robinson. "He was wrong in suffering himself to

to be crucified. He should not have attacked the Govt. He had no business with such matters." And again, "'Christ,' said he, 'took much after his mother [the law], and in that respect was one of the worst of men.' On my requiring an explanation he said, 'There was his turning the money-changers out of the Temple. He had no right to do that.' Blake then declared against those who sat in judgment on others."

Some of the finest designs in Blake's illuminated books are to be found in Jerusalem, notably "Christ Crucified Adored by Albion," which ranks among the most impressive and moving representations of the Crucifixion. The dead Christ is nailed to the Tree of Good and Evil, and below stands the solitary figure of Man, himself adopting the cruciform attitude which symbolizes the sacrifice of the selfhood. Among the most striking of the smaller designs are the serpent chariot drawn by the human-headed bulls, the swan woman, and the figure of Beulah enthroned on the sunflower of desire, which suggests Blake's transcription of the Buddha seated on the lotus flower.

Jerusalem is mentioned with inappropriate flippancy in the London Magazine for September 1820 under the heading of "Mr Janus Weathercock's Private Correspondence."

Talking of articles, my learned friend Dr Tobias Ruddicombe, M D is, at my earnest entreaty, casting a tremendous piece of ordnance, an eighty-eight pounder! which he proposeth to fire off in your next. It is an account of an ancient, newly discovered illuminated manuscript, which has to name Jerusalem the Emanation of the Giant Albion! It contains a good deal anent one "Los", who, it appears, is now, and hath been from the Creation, the sole and four-fold dominator of the celebrated city of Golgonooza! The doctor assures me that the redemption of mankind hangs on the universal diffusion of the doctrines broached in this M S. But, however, that isn't the subject of this scrimum, scroll, or scrawl, or whatever you may call it.

The proposed exposition of Jerusalem was probably unacceptable to John Scott, then editor of the London, as no such article appeared. This is to be regretted since Blake's own voice might have been audible through the "tricked and unsold style" of the interpreter, as Lamb's "light-hearted Janus," Thomas Griffiths Wainewright, journalist, painter, and murderer, was a friend and admirer of

Blake's He had purchased one of the most beautiful copies of the Songs of Innocence and of Experience, and although no other reference of his to Blake's work has been found, he was a supporter of imaginative art after his fashion

"We are now in the great room, reader," he writes of the Royal Academy Exhibition of 1821, "where, if you have no objection, we will sit down behind this gay party, who seems to be dealing about their remarks as freely as you and I do 'Whose is that?' 'Fuseli's'—'La! What a frightful thing! I hate his fancies of fairies and spirits and nonsense One can't understand them' (Speak for yourself, miss!) 'It's foolish to paint things which nobody ever saw, for how is one to know whether they're right? Isn't it, Mr D——?' 'Ha, Ha! very good indeed—'pon my life, you're very severe' "

Samuel Palmer gives a little picture of Blake at the Academy pointing out a painting of Wainewright's illustrating Walton's Angler as "very fine," "while so many moments better worthy to remain are fled, the caprice of memory presents me with the image of Blake looking up at Wainewright's picture, Blake in his plain black suit and rather broad-brimmed, but not quakerish hat, standing so quietly among all the dressed-up, rustling, swelling people, and myself thinking 'How little you know who is among you!'"

It was not till three years after Blake's death that Wainewright took the first step in the criminal career which led to his transportation to Australia, by insuring his sister-in-law's life and poisoning her with strychnine after securing a will in his own favour

While Blake was engraving Jerusalem he was writing in the manuscript book notes for a poem which, if finished and revised, would have been as forcible an expression of his later doctrine as the Marriage of Heaven and Hell was of the earlier The Everlasting Gospel is neither giant nor fairy it embodies the mature wisdom of that converted angel who as devil became Blake's particular friend Unfortunately it exists only in overlapping fragments Two supplementary passages with a prose preface were were printed in full for the first time in Mr Keynes' edition of Blake's Writings. This valuable addition, which has all the appearance of an exordium, makes it easier to conceive what the finished poems would have been. But the order in which the various fragments were to have been placed cannot be recovered. The metre is the octosyllable of "L'Allegro," but handled with the freedom which Blake had practised from his earliest youth. The effect is therefore very like that of Christabel, Blake's lines being somewhat more regular, but considerably rougher in texture.

In the introduction, which is as lucid as Jerusalem is obscure, Blake states his thesis: the moral virtues were an old story, Jesus came to announce one Gospel only, forgiveness of sins, thus bringing to light Life and Immortality, because only through forgiveness can man realize his eternal nature, vengeance is the betrayal of this nature, the "Murder of the Divine Image."

The Accuser, Holy God of All This Pharisaic Worldly Ball, identified with Lucifer, demands the Crucifixion of Jesus because forgiveness of sins is destructive of his daughters, the moral virtues, who owe their birth to accusations of sin. Blake is obviously trying to express himself in simple and popular language. For instance, he has deleted

"Jerusalem" he said to me and has substituted

It was when Jesus said to Me,
"Thy sins are all forgiven thee" and the "Mysterious Tree" is clearly defined as that "Of Good & Evil & Misery And Death & Hell / " The fragment lettered a is the original opening of the poem as it stands in the Rossetti MS. It has been suggested on the strength of the "great hook nose" that Stothard is the person addressed, but it more probable that Blake simply chose a type unlike himself to represent those whose interpretation of the Bible differs widely from his own. A note in the MS book gives comic expression to his habit of regarding Christ as an ideal self: "I always thought thought that Jesus Christ was a Snubby or I should not have worship'd him, if I had thought he had been one of those long spindle nosed rascals" The rest of the fragments elaborate the reply of the Devil in the last "Memorable Fancy" to the Angel who asked whether Christ had not approved the decalogue now hear how he has given his sanction to the law of ten commandments did he not mock at the sabbath, and so mock the sabbath's God? murder those who were murder'd because of him? turn away the law from the woman taken in adultery? steal the labor of others to support him? bear false witness when he omitted to make a defence before Pilate? covet when he pray'd for his disciples, and when he bid them shake off the dust of their feet against such as refused to lodge them? I tell you, no virtue can exist without breaking these ten commandments Jesus was all virtue, and acted from impulse, not from rules

The fragments b, c and d are different treatments of the same theme, Jesus' lack of gentleness or humility as shown by the events of his life, d, the latest version, is the longest and fullest Above it is written the title, The Everlasting Gospel The lines

Thou art a Man, God is no more,
Thy own humanity learn to adore,
For that is my Spirit of Life may be compared with Blake's reply when Crabb Robinson asked his view concerning the divinity of Jesus "He said—He is the only God—But then he added—'And so am I & so are you' "

Fragment e describes the episode of the woman taken in adultery, who is identified with Mary Magdalene Here Blake, through the mouth of Christ, makes his fiercest attack on the God of the Old Testament

Thou art Good, & thou Alone,
Nor may the sinner cast one stone
To be Good only, is to be A God or else a Pharisee

But the day of God, the Creator and lawgiver, is over

Tho' thou wast so pure & bright
That Heaven was Impure in thy Sight, Tho' thy Oath turn'd Heaven Pale,
Tho' thy Covenant built Hell's Jail,

Tho'

Tho' thou didst all to Chaos roll
 With the Serpent for its soul,
 Still the breath Divine does move
 And the breath Divine is Love

The dialogue between Jesus and Mary which follows is the finest passage in the poem

"Mary, Fear Not! Let me see
 The Seven Devils that torment thee Hide not from my Sight thy Sin,
 That forgiveness thou maist win
 Has no Man condemned thee?"
 "No Man, Lord" "then what is he Who shall Accuse thee? Come ye forth, Fallen fiends of Heav'nly birth
 That have forgot your Ancient love
 And driven away my trembling Dove
 You shall bow before her feet,
 You shall lick the dust for Meat,
 And tho' you cannot Love, but Hate,
 Shall be beggars at Love's Gate
 What was thy love? Let me see it, Was it love or dark deceit?"
 "Love too long from Me has fled,
 'Twas dark deceit, to Earn my bread,
 'Twas Covet, or 'twas Custom, or Some trifle not worth caring for,
 That they may call a shame & Sin
 Love's temple that God dwelleth in,
 And hide in secret hidden shrine
 The Naked Human form divine,
 And render that a Lawless thing
 On which the Soul Expands its wing
 But this, O Lord, this was my Sin
 When first I let these devils in
 In dark pretence to Chastity Blaspheming Love, blaspheming thee
 Thence Rose Secret Adulteries,
 And thence did Covet also rise
 My sin thou hast forgiven me,
 Canst thou forgive my Blasphemy?
 Canst thou return to this dark Hell,
 And in my burning bosom dwell?
 And canst thou die that I may live?
 And canst thou Pity & forgive?"

In the fragment lettered z Blake questions the doctrine of the Virgin birth, but his treatment of the subject is less sympathetic and original than in Jerusalem, and he does

does not here associate the birth of Jesus with forgiveness of sin. But as he implies that the birth of Jesus was not miraculous, so, too, he denies that Jesus shared the cold inhuman purity of God, the Creator

Or what was it which he took on That he might bring Salvation?
A Body subject to be Tempted,
From neither pain nor grief Exempted?
Or such a body as might not feel
The passions that with Sinners deal?
Yes, but they say he never fell
Ask Caiaphas, for he can tell

Then follows a summary of Christ's offences against the decalogue and social conventions. This is the last fragment and it is vain to conjecture how Blake would have ended the poem.

He turned, it would seem, from the unfinished Everlasting Gospel to his old picture book, For Children The Gates of Paradise. But his concern is now no longer with the innocent, the instinctively pure, and accordingly he engraved another title-page, For the Sexes The Gates of Paradise. He also wrote a Prologue, verses explaining the emblems, which he called "The Keys of the Gates," and an Epilogue, and made some additions to the legends below the emblems.

The first lines of the Prologue

Mutual Forgiveness of each Vice,
Such are the Gates of Paradise—— are an echo of lines in the second set of supplementary verses to The Everlasting Gospel

The Christian trumpets loud proclaim Thro' all the World in Jesus' name
Mutual forgiveness of each Vice,
And oped the Gates of Paradise

Why, Blake asks, when Jehovah himself repented writing the decalogue and hid it beneath his Mercy Seat, have Christians exalted it? Then follow the sixteen emblems. The couplet engraved between "The Keys" and "Of the Gates" refers to the frontispiece and is a slightly different version of two lines in the "Auguries of Innocence." The rest

rest of these verses explain the emblems in turn, the number in the margin showing to which the lines refer. The symbolism will be clear to readers of the preceding pages on Jerusalem and The Everlasting Gospel.

The Epilogue is addressed to "The Accuser," who does not distinguish the individual from the state, the Anti-christ and God of this World.

CHAPTER VIII

FRIENDS AND OBSERVERS

The Man who never in his Mind & Thoughts travel'd to Heaven Is No Artist

IN 1818 Blake formed the first of those friendships with men much younger than himself who were to gather round him during the last years of his life. John Linnell describes their meeting in his autobiographical notes

At Rathbone Place, 1818 here I first became acquainted with William Blake, to whom I paid a visit in company with the younger Mr Cumberland. Blake lived then in South Molton Street, Oxford Street, second floor. We soon became intimate, and I employed him to help me with an engraving of my portrait of Mr Upton, a Baptist preacher, which he was glad to do, having scarcely enough employment to live by at the prices he could obtain, everything in Art was at a low ebb then.

John Linnell, then aged twenty-six and already a successful artist, was friend rather than disciple, as his work shows no direct traces of Blake's influence. He is now best known as a landscape painter, but in early manhood he supported his family mainly by painting portraits. During Blake's lifetime Linnell was a member of the Baptist community, later he contemplated for a time becoming a member of the Society of Friends, and was a Plymouth Brother for a few years, but finally he severed his connection with all religious bodies, though he maintained to the last his own evangelical fervour. A precocious boy, he had been a pupil of John Varley's when he was twelve years old, and it was probably early in 1819 that he introduced Blake to his former master.

Varley, Blake's junior by twenty years, was a well-known teacher: he was one of the founders of the Society of Painters in Water-Colours, and his best work ranks high among the water-colour landscapes of the period. He was a big, unwieldy man, fond of boxing, like his brother-in-law Mulready, so extravagant and happy-go-lucky that though he made a large income he was constantly stantly in money difficulties and died in poverty His spirits were irrepressible, he was three times burnt out of house and home, he had also a fatal attraction for furious bulls, and his son was mentally defective, but each of these troubles in turn seemed to him a crowning mercy "All these troubles are necessary to me If it were not for my troubles I should burst with joy!" Varley had a passion for the dubious sciences He was a palmist and an astrologer, and had the remarkable luck of predicting truly his own misfortunes and those of his friends He arrived at his results by means of mathematical calculations, Blake's attraction for him was the possession of the visionary faculty which he himself lacked Blake had tried to protest publicly against the ill-treatment of an astrologer, he would doubtless have done the same for the most rationalistic disciple of Newton and Locke, but he seems to have had little respect for astrology with its values of worldly weal "Your fortunate nativity," he would say, "I count the worst You reckon to be born in August, and have the notice and patronage of Kings to be the best of all, whereas, the lives of the Apostles and martyrs, of whom it is said the world was not worthy, would be counted by you as the worst, and their nativities those of men born to be hanged "

Most of Blake's famous visionary heads were drawn at night in the company of Varley and Linnell Cunningham's account may be quoted as the first and freshest, with the warning that though he applied to Linnell for assistance in his memoir, he appears to have relied more on Varley's information, and that probably lost nothing in the telling

To describe the conversations which Blake held in prose with demons and in verse with angels, would fill volumes, and an ordinary gallery could not contain all the heads which he drew of his visionary visitants That all this was real, he himself most sincerely believed, nay, so infectious was his enthusiasm, that some acute and sensible persons who heard him expatiate, shook their heads, and hinted that he was an extraordinary man, and that there might be something in the matter One of his brethren, an artist of some note, employed him frequently in drawing the portraits of those who appeared to him in visions The most propitious time for those "angel-visits" was from nine at night till five in the morning, and so docile were his spiritual sitters, that they appeared at the wish of his friends Sometimes, however, the shape which he desired to draw was long in appearing, and he sat with his pencil and paper ready and his eyes idly roaming in vacancy, all at once the vision came upon him, and he began to work like one possessed
even,

He was requested to draw the likeness of William Wallace—the eye of Blake sparkled, for he admired heroes “William Wallace!” he exclaimed, “I see him now, there, there, how noble he looks—reach me my things!” Having drawn for some time, with the same care of hand and steadiness of eye, as if a living sitter had been before him, Blake stopped suddenly and said, “I cannot finish him—Edward the First has stepped in between him and me” “That’s lucky,” said his friend, “for I want the portrait of Edward too” Blake took another sheet of paper, and sketched the features of Plantagenet, upon which his Majesty politely vanished, and the artist finished the head of Wallace “And pray, sir,” said a gentleman, who heard Blake’s friend tell his story—“was Sir William Wallace an heroic-looking man? And what sort of personage was Edward?” The answer was, “There they are, sir, both framed and hanging on the wall behind you, judge for yourself” “I looked (says my informant) and saw two warlike heads of the size of common life That of Wallace was noble, and heroic, that of Edward stern and bloody The first had the front of a god, the latter the aspect of a demon”

The friend who obliged me with these anecdotes, on observing the interest which I took in the subject, said, “I know much about Blake—I was his companion for nine years I have sat beside him from ten at night till three in the morning, sometimes slumbering and sometimes waking, but Blake never slept, he sat with a pencil and paper drawing portraits of those whom I most desired to see I will show you, sir, some of these works” He took out a large book filled with drawings, opened it, and continued, “Observe the poetic fervour of that face—it is Pindar as he stood a conqueror in the Olympic games And this lovely creature is Corinna, who conquered in poetry in the same place That Lady is Lais, the courtesan—with the impudence which is part of her profession, she stepped in between Blake and Corinna, and he was obliged to paint her to get her away There! that is a face of a different stamp—can you conjecture who he is?” “Some scoundrel, I should think, sir,” “There now—that is a strong proof of the accuracy of Blake—he is a scoundrel indeed! The very individual task-master whom Moses slew in Egypt And who is this now—only imagine who this is?” “Other than a good one, I doubt, sir” “You are right, it is the Devil—he resembles, and this is remarkable, two men who shall be nameless one is a great lawyer, and the other—I wish I durst name him—is a suborner of false witnesses This other head now?—this speaks for itself—it is the head of Herod, how like an eminent officer in the army!”

He closed the book, and taking out a small panel from a private drawer, said, “This is the last which I shall show you, but it is the greatest curiosity of all Only look at the splendour of the colouring and the original character of the thing!” “I see,” said I, “a naked figure with a strong body and a short neck—with burning eyes which long

long for moisture, and a face worthy of a murderer, holding a bloody cup in its clawed hands, out of which it seems eager to drink I never saw any shape so strange, nor did I ever see any colouring so curiously splendid—a kind of glistening green and dusky gold, beautifully varnished But what in the world is it?" "It is a ghost, sir—the ghost of a flea—a spiritualization of the thing!" "He saw this in a vision then," I said "I'll tell you all about it, sir I called on him one evening, and found Blake more than usually excited He told me he had seen a wonderful thing—the ghost of a flea! 'And did you make a drawing of him?' I inquired 'No, indeed,' said he, 'I wish I had, but I shall, if he appears again!' He looked earnestly into a corner of the room, and then said, 'here he is—reach me my things—I shall keep my eye on him There he comes!' his eager tongue whisking out of his mouth, a cup in his hand to hold blood and covered with a scaly skin of gold and green,—as he described him so he drew him "

These stories are scarcely credible, yet there can be no doubt of their accuracy Another friend, on whose veracity I have the fullest dependence, called one evening on Blake, and found him sitting with a pencil and a panel, drawing a portrait with all the seeming anxiety of a man who is conscious that he has got a fastidious sitter, he looked and drew, and drew and looked, yet no living soul was visible "Disturb me not," said he, in a whisper, "I have one sitting to me " "Sitting to you!" exclaimed his astonished visitor, "where is he, and what is he?"—I see no one " "But I see him, sir," answered Blake haughtily, "there he is, his name is Lot—you may read of him in the Scripture He is sitting for his portrait "

Gilchrist's account is more temperate, and he refers to various visionary heads not mentioned by Cunningham A head of Solomon is particularly striking it is as direct and definite in psychological conception as the portrait of a living sitter

A note in one edition of The Scottish Chiefs, by Jane Porter, herself a lioness and swift in the pursuit of lions, affords a curious proof of the obscurity in which Blake lived Her brother, Robert Ker Porter, was a member of the "Brothers", a society of young painters founded by Francia and Girtin, she herself was often present at their meetings, and among her intimate friends was Sir Benjamin West

The preceding note having been appended to the first edition of this work, at the same time of its answering date, an extraordinary circumstance which occurred a few years afterwards, regarding certain portraits of Sir William Wallace and Robert Bruce, the author of these pages is tempted to repeat now, as being a something strange and romantic story The original relater of it was Mr Blake, a young painter of remarkable talents, but which were at times, carried away into

into wild fancies, a mirage of waking dreams, which he gravely asserted, on describing them, were real visions from the departed world. Soon after the publication of the "Scottish Chiefs", his ardent nature had deeply interested him in their fate, but most particularly in that of Wallace, of whose unjust doom he was often in the habit of speaking to a friend of the author of the book, and with a force of language, and indignation at the fact, as if the noble victim's death had been only an event of yesterday.

In one of my friend's calls on the young painter, he found him in an almost breathless ecstasy, which he explained to him, by telling him that he had just achieved two sketches—one of Sir William Wallace, the other of his enemy, Edward the First! Both chiefs having actually appeared to him successively and had successively stood, at his earnest request, to allow him to make a hasty sketch of their forms.

While he related this, he placed a small canvas, of the common portrait size, on his easel, before my friend, on which was drawn, in a bold and admirable manner, the head of a young warrior in the prime of his days as Wallace is described to have been, even at the time in which he was cut off [Here follows a long description of the portrait.]

While my friend was contemplating this extraordinary portrait, its enraptured artist had described its origin, in this wise—"He was sitting, meditating, as he had often done, on the heroic actions and hard fate of the Scottish hero, when, like a flash of lightning, a noble form stood before him, which he instantly knew, by a something within himself, to be Sir William Wallace. He felt it was a spiritual appearance, which might vanish away as instantly as it came, and, transported at the sight, he besought the hero to remain a few moments till he might sketch him. The warrior Scot, in this vision, seemed as true to his historical mental picture, as his noble shade was to the manly bearing of his recorded person, for, with his accustomed courtesy, he smiled on the young painter, and the sketch was outlined, with a tint or two besides. But, while eagerly proceeding, the artist bent his head once too often, to replenish his pencil, and turning again to pursue the noble contour, the spirit of the 'stalworth knight' had withdrawn from mortal ken. But (Blake proceeded to say), it had not left a vacancy! Edward the First stood in its place, armed from head to foot, in a close and superb suit of mail, but with the visor of his helmet open!"

The artist, it appears, had as little difficulty in recognizing the royal hero as when, his heart, as well as his eyes bowing before the august figure just departed, told him it was the Caledonian patriot he beheld. His English loyalty, however, made him rise before the royal apparition. Nevertheless, he saluted the monarch with the same earnest privilege of enthusiastic genius, which had dictated his request to the Scottish chief, and he asked the stern-looking, but majestic warrior-king of England, to allow him to make a corresponding sketch. This too was accorded. And he had arrived at about the same point, as in the former portrait, when the British hero also disappeared,—and Blake was left—not so disappointed at not having accomplished all he wished, as enraptured at having been permitted to behold two such extraordinary characters, and to have thus far, identified their personal presence to himself, and to the world, to all posterity! For such was his own conviction. The vast expense of life's energies, wrought in this young man by the over-active exercise of his talents and the burning enthusiasm, which almost ever over-stimulated their action, swiftly consumed his constitution and not very long after the painting of these two visionary portraits, he died of a rapid decline—my friend purchased them both, and subsequently showed them to me, recounting the little history, I have just repeated

It will be observed that Miss Porter's account and Cunningham's differ in various particulars the one is exploiting Varley for journalistic purposes, the other instinctively enhances the romance of the situation. But the most striking feature of Miss Porter's note is her description of Blake's early death, this is obviously her own characteristic contribution, but it proves that Blake's name and reputation were entirely unknown to her, although she was familiar with a number of artists

In Linnell's amusing sketch of Blake and Varley arguing Blake seems almost a votary of Urizen beside the eager, credulous Varley, and Linnell himself remarks that "Varley believed in the reality of Blake's visions more than even Blake himself" Varley, it would seem, believed that Blake actually summoned the spirits of the dead to sit for their portraits in a bodily form invisible to others, and this in spite of Blake's own explanations. Linnell says

Even to John Varley, to whom I had introduced Blake, and who readily devoured all the marvellous in Blake's most extravagant utterances—even to Varley Blake would occasionally explain, unasked, how he believed that both Varley and I could see the same visions as he saw—making it evident to me that Blake claimed the possession of some powers, only in a greater degree than all men possessed, and which they undervalued in themselves, and lost through love of sordid pursuits, pride, vanity, and the unrighteous Mammon

Blake, it may be inferred, did not, like Varley, regard himself as a spiritualistic medium in the ordinary sense. He believed that he, and others who chose to cultivate the power, could have visionary intercourse with the spirits of the dead, because he believed in the timeless union of all things in the Divine Mind, and hence that the living could command the world memory to a greater or less extent. He visualized and drew these heads just as many people can

can visualize and draw a well-known face or landscape. It has already been suggested that this power, which was most active at night, was connected with the ordinary phenomenon of hypnagogic images, which are very rarely under the voluntary control of the subject.

Linnell himself evidently thought the visionary heads of considerable interest, as he bought those of the flea and thirty-six others from Blake, and also painted some of them in oil for Varley from Blake's drawings. He was so strongly attracted to Blake that, although in later years disposed to accentuate his heterodoxy, he made a genuine effort to fathom his darkest sayings.

I soon encountered Blake's peculiarities, and was sometimes taken aback by the boldness of some of his assertions. I never saw anything the least like madness. I never opposed him spitefully, as many did. But being really anxious to fathom, if possible, the amount of truth that there might be in his most startling assertions, I generally met with a sufficiently rational explanation in the most really friendly and conciliatory tone.

Linnell does not record his own opinion of the visionary heads. It is possible that he was more interested in Blake's power of visualizing his conceptions for practical purposes than in the likeness of the portraits to their originals.

Linnell's attitude toward Blake was from first to last that of a sensible and affectionate son. They were good companions, and enjoyed going together to theatres and to see paintings and prints. Linnell introduced Blake to his friends, and put him in the way of obtaining work, although it was not till later that he realized how poor Blake was. The illuminated books were still a source of income, and his wider acquaintance probably made it possible to dispose of a few more of these, but the expense of materials prevented his keeping a store of them in hand for casual disposal. A letter of June 1818 to Dawson Turner of Great Yarmouth, botanist, antiquary, and patron of art, shows that he considered them "unprofitable enough to me, tho' Expensive to the Buyer." After giving a list of books and prints he says.

The few I have Printed & Sold are sufficient to have gained me great reputation as an Artist, which was the chief thing Intended. But I have never been able to produce a Sufficient number for a general Sale

Sale by means of a regular Publisher It is therefore necessary to me that any Person wishing to have any or all of these should send me their Order to Print them on the above terms, & I will take care that they shall be done at least as well as any I have yet Produced

A comparison of this list with that of Blake's Prospectus of 1793 shows a considerable rise in the prices that of America has increased from 10s 6d to 5 guineas, The Book of Thel from 3s to 2 guineas, both the Songs of Innocence and the Songs of Experience from 5s to 3 guineas The list in a letter to George Cumberland nine years later shows a further increase of a guinea or two guineas in most cases

In 1820 he engraved a portrait of Mrs Quentin, one of the Regent's mistresses, after Huet Villiers About the same time he executed a series of twenty-one water-colour drawings illustrating the Book of Job for his old patron, Thomas Butts These were afterwards engraved at Linnell's instance The print of the Laocoon surrounded by mystical sentences was engraved about 1820 Only one copy of this is known, and it can scarcely have been a remunerative publication

The annotations to Berkeley's Siris and the one page leaflet On Homer's Poetry and On Virgil were written about the same time Only six copies of the latter are known They are printed in black and uncoloured to the left of the second heading is a small drawing of Homer playing a harp, while a group of four figures listens The substance of all these utterances is the same and may be summed up in the last notes on the Siris "Man is All Imagination God is Man & exists in us & we in him" "What Jesus came to Remove was the Heathen or Platonic Philosophy, which blinds the Eye of Imagination, The Real Man"

Through Linnell or otherwise Blake had become acquainted with Lady Caroline Lamb, and there is a glimpse of him at one of her parties in Lady Charlotte Bury's Diary for 20th January 1820

I dined at Lady C L——'s She had collected a strange party of artists and literati and one or two fine folks, who were very ill assorted with the rest of the company, and appeared neither to give nor receive pleasure from the society among whom they mingled Sr T Lawrence, next whom I sat at dinner, is as courtly as ever His conversation is agreeable, but I never feel as if he was saying what he really thought

Besides

Besides Sir T, there was also present of this profession Mrs M (Mee), the miniature painter, a modest, pleasing person, like the pictures she executes, soft and sweet. Then there was another eccentric little artist, by name Blake, not a regular professional painter, but one of those persons who follow the art for its own sweet sake, and derive their happiness from its pursuit. He appeared to me to be full of beautiful imaginations and genius, but how far the execution of his designs is equal to the conceptions of his mental vision, I know not, never having seen them. Mann-d'œuvre is frequently wanting where the mind is most powerful. Mr Blake appears unlearned in all that concerns this world, and, from what he said, I should fear he is one of those whose feelings are far superior to his situation in life. He looks care-worn and subdued, but his countenance radiated as he spoke of his favourite pursuit, and he appeared gratified by talking to a person who comprehended his feelings. I can easily imagine that he seldom meets with any one who enters into his views, for they are peculiar, and exalted above the common level of received opinions. I could not help contrasting this humble artist with the great and powerful Sir Thomas Lawrence, and thinking that the one was fully if not more worthy of the distinction and fame to which the other has attained, but from which he is far removed. Mr Blake, however, though he may have as much right, from talent and merit, to the advantages of which Sir Thomas is possessed, evidently lacks that worldly wisdom and that grace of manner which make a man sure of eminence in his profession, and succeed in society. Every word he uttered spoke the perfect simplicity of his mind, and his total ignorance of all worldly matters. He told me that Lady C L had been very kind to him. "Ah!" said he, "there is a deal of kindness in that lady." I agreed with him, and though it was impossible not to laugh at the strange manner in which she had arranged this party, I could not help admiring the goodness of heart and discrimination of talent which had made her patronise this unknown artist. Sir T Lawrence looked at me several times whilst I was talking with Mr B, and I saw his lips curl with a sneer, as if he despised me for conversing with so insignificant a person. It was very evident Sir Thomas did not like the company he found himself in, though he was too well-bred and too prudent to hazard a remark upon the subject.

Sir Thomas, after his dinner-table courtesies, may have resented Lady Charlotte's obvious preference for the society of a shabby old man whom he probably did not know by sight, but when introduced to Blake about two years later by Linnell he proved his admiration by buying a copy of the Songs of Innocence and of Experience and two drawings, "Queen Catherine's Dream" and "The Wise and Foolish Virgins", at fifteen guineas apiece. Gilchrist's irresponsible saying that Lawrence considered it "almost giving the money" is falsified by a note in a friend's diary

to the effect that the latter "was Sir Thomas' favourite drawing", and that "he commonly kept it on his table in his studio, as a study" This was a genuine tribute from the possessor of a famous collection of drawings by old masters

In 1820 Blake began his illustrations for Dr Thornton's edition of Virgil's Pastorals, adapted for use in schools Thornton was a well-known physician and botanist Linnell probably suggested the commission as Thornton was his family doctor The edition has 230 illustrations from various hands Blake's contributions are six engravings from his own drawings of the busts of Theocritus, Virgil, Augustus, Agrippa, Julius Cæsar, and Epicurus, a woodcut of a drawing after Poussin, and twenty woodcuts from his own designs, only seventeen of which were executed by himself The latter, the only woodcuts he is known to have attempted, narrowly escaped the fate of his designs for Blair's Grave The publishers, according to Gilchrist, were for rejecting the seventeen, and having them recut by another hand Dr Thornton was luckily reassured as to their merit by a party of artists, among whom were Lawrence, James Ward, and Linnell, but thought it necessary to add a propitiatory note which recalls Blake's first introduction to the public by the Rev Henry Mathew

The illustrations of this English Pastoral are by the famous Blake, the illustrator of Young's Night Thoughts, and Blair's Grave, who designed and engraved them himself This is mentioned as they display less of art than of genius, and are much admired by some eminent painters

The thwarted publishers avenged themselves by allowing some of the blocks to be worked over, and also by cutting down sixteen of Blake's seventeen blocks in order to fit their pages Much of the beauty and spaciousness of the original designs, of which proofs remain in eight instances, is lost in the mutilated prints So carefully had Blake planned his designs for the effect he wished to produce that his original drawings are considered by some critics inferior to the woodcuts, whatever these may lack in technical efficiency The influence of these woodcuts on the group of young painters who nicknamed themselves

the "Ancients" is discussed in a later chapter

In 1821 Blake's landlord in South Molton Street retired, and the Blakes removed to 3 Fountain Court, Strand, where they rented the first floor of a house occupied by Mr Banes, Mrs Blake's brother-in-law. During the first months in his new home Blake seems to have had serious financial difficulties, as he sold his entire collection of prints to Messrs Colnaghi Linnell, on realizing his position, made representations to Lawrence, Collins, and some other Royal Academicians, who induced the Council to vote in 1822 a donation of £25, which was transmitted to Blake by Linnell.

Blake issued, in 1822, a dramatic poem

THE GHOST OF ABEL

A REVELATION IN THE VISIONS OF JEHOVAH SEEN BY WILLIAM BLAKE

This was the last time he made use of his invention of relief-etching, and after the date in the colophon are the words "Blake's Original Stereotype was 1788." Four copies only are known, printed in black and uncoloured. The dedication offers his solution of the Mystery to the author of Cain, still wandering in the wilderness of error. Adam refuses to hear the voice of Jehovah, and immediately the Ghost of Abel, like those in Vala who were murdered before the Last Judgment has been passed and error cast out, calls for vengeance, but Eve knows intuitively that it is not the real Abel. For Adam

"It is all a Vain delusion of the all creative Imagination Eve, come away, & let us not believe these vain delusions Abel is dead, & Cain slew him. We shall also Die a Death,
And then, what then? be, as poor Abel, a Thought, or as This! O, what shall I call thee, Form Divine, Father of Mercies, That appearest to my Spiritual Vision? Eve, seest thou also?"

Eve's reply is Blake's own: it is also a clear explanation of the nature of his visions, and of his faith in them as the highest expression of his spiritual imagination.

"I see him plainly with my Mind's Eye. I see also Abel living, Tho' terribly afflicted, as We also are, yet Jehovah sees him Alive & not Dead, were it not better to believe Vision
With all our might & strength, tho' we are fallen & lost?"

When

When the Ghost of Abel defies God and sinks into the grave still demanding blood for blood, Satan, the Accuser, is revealed, and claims the great vengeance, the sacrifice of God on Calvary. But Jehovah condemns him to "Eternal Death In Self Annihilation, even till Satan, Self-subdu'd, Put off Satan." Satan, it should be noted, is not here conceived as error only, but as the Accuser who can be redeemed when he will listen to the Everlasting Gospel, and cast out his error. The chorus of Angels hails the acceptance by the Heathen Gods, the Avengers, of Jehovah's Covenant of the Forgiveness of Sins. God is named Jehovah in this poem because he is not yet known in time as Jesus.

A commission from Linnell in 1821 led to Blake's greatest achievement as an engraver and his most widely known work as an artist. He had borrowed from Mr Butts the series of water-colour drawings illustrating the Book of Job, hoping to obtain orders for replicas. Linnell alone responded, and in September himself traced the outlines from Butts' drawings, which Blake completed with some variations from the originals. As no further orders were forthcoming Linnell suggested that Blake should produce a book of engravings from these designs as a more saleable alternative, and offered to bear the risk of the undertaking. Blake therefore made a set of reduced pencil sketches, and began to engrave the plates in 1823. The terms of the agreement between himself and Linnell were as follows:

March 25, 1823—Mem. of agreement between W B and J L. W B to engrave the set of plates from his designs to "Job", in number 20, for J L. J L to pay W B £5 per plate, part before, and the remainder when the plates are finished. Also, J L to pay Mr B £100 out of the profits of the work as the receipts will admit of it. J L to find copper-plates.

W B, J L

The book was published in March 1826, and although no profits resulted, Linnell paid Blake an additional sum of £50 by instalments between March 1823 and October 1825. A receipt for the total of £150, dated 14th July 1826 sets forth that this sum was paid "for the copyright and plates [22 in number] of the 'Job', published March, 1825, by William Blake, author."

Cumberland

Cumberland had made a special study of Bonasone, and Linnell possessed his large print of Michael Angelo's "Last Judgment", and probably a selection of Marcantonio's work. Blake's growing familiarity with the style of these engravers had enabled him to rid himself of the heavy mechanical manner derived from Basire, his imagination had long been possessed by the Book of Job, as his earlier drawing, engraving, and lithograph testify, and more over he was free in this venture from commercial interference. The omens, for once, were wholly favourable.

These illustrations have been so frequently reproduced that any description would be unnecessary. Had not a modern critic shown that the designs are not mere straightforward comments on the Bible story, but the vehicle for Blake's own gospel? These Inventions are, as Mr Joseph Wicksteed has shown, the greatest of the symbolic books, the only one of the Giants who has attained form and proportion. Blake himself gives a hint of his intention to George Cumberland, who had been vainly trying to dispose of a copy to the Bristol booksellers:

I thank you for the pains you have taken with poor Job. I know too well that the great majority of Englishmen are fond of the indefinite, which they measure by Newton's doctrine of the fluxions of an atom, a thing which does not exist. These are politicians, and think that Republican art is inimical to their atom, for a line or a lineament is not formed by chance. A line is a line in its minutest subdivisions, straight or crooked. It is itself, not inter-measurable by anything else. Such is Job. But since the French Revolution Englishmen are all intermeasurable by one another—certainly a happy state of agreement, in which I for one do not agree. God keep you and me from the divinity of yes and no too—the yea, nay, creeping Jesus—from supposing up and down to be the same thing, as all experimentalists must suppose.

This passage alone would suggest that Blake's pre-occupation with the contrast between the eternal, the spiritual, and the material, the illusory, finds expression in the Inventions. But there are also frequent indications both in his verse and drawings that up and down must not be confused, neither must right and left: the right has been customarily esteemed the propitious direction and the honourable position, and Blake followed other mystics in extending the meaning of right and left to spiritual and material material The use of this symbolism is probably more deliberate and consistent in the Job than elsewhere, but it must not be forgotten that in A Vision of the Last Judgement Blake had entreated the Spectator to attend to the hands and feet Some of the variations on the water-colour drawings tend to increase the symbolic significance of the engravings, but the main proof that their meaning does not lie on the surface is to be found in the texts and designs in the borders, which always throw light on the central design Moreover, readers of Jerusalem and Blake's other writings of the same period will recognize the pictorial expression of symbols with which they are already familiar.

Job in the Bible is the just man who eschews evil and observes the ceremonies of religion, tested and humiliated that God may convince Satan of Job's allegiance to himself Job is rewarded for his constancy and his unnecessary suffering by a renewal of God's favour and the restoration and increase of his worldly prosperity his only spiritual satisfaction besides a confirmation of his belief in God's power is the conviction of his own inability to understand the ways of the Almighty

Blake's Job, on the other hand, passes from the state of innocence because he cultivates a rigid and repressive holiness, and fails to offer the only sacrifice which avails anything, that of the selfhood His sufferings in the contrary state of experience are at once the result of his own error and the means through which he attains full spiritual stature In the first illustration the sun is sitting behind the "living form" of a Gothic cathedral Job, with his wife and children, surrounded by the flocks which mark his material prosperity, is shown in the solemn exercise of family prayers the letter which killeth is symbolized by the heavy books open on the parents' knees, and the spirit which giveth life by the joyful instruments of music, discarded and hung up on the tree behind them This is followed by a revelation of Job's spiritual condition Above the family group a smug God in Job's own image sits in his heaven, with a book of the precepts which Job obeys open on his knees, the records of Job's good deeds are being handed about from earth to heaven in order to justify him against Satan, the Accuser of Sin, while on the other side of Satan the self-satisfied faces of Job and his wife bear witness to his spiritual error. Job next sends the winged accuser of his own thought against his sons, who are the victims of the excesses which he has made attractive to them by restraint and repression. Then come two messengers, left foot foremost, announcing the destruction of his property, while the figure of a third in the far distance with the right foot in advance, shows that material disaster will be followed by spiritual. In the fifth design the "living form" of the cathedral is replaced by a Druid altar. God is seated less firmly in his heaven, while Satan, the spiritual error in Job's own mind, is beginning his attack on Job himself. Below, Job, with a sanctimonious expression, retains the loaf in his right hand, while he gives that in his left to a beggar. On either side hover two angels of holiness betraying his self-approving thoughts. Then Satan descends on him in full fury. The four arrows show that he has killed four of the senses, and he is smiting the fifth, touch and sex. He is standing on Job's right leg to signify that the disease is spiritual. Job ignores his wife, who has hitherto been completely united with him, and she is weeping at his feet. The design is similar to the painting in the Tate Gallery, but a great thunder-cloud takes the place of Satan's wings, showing that the Accuser has not been sent forth by Job against others, as in the third illustration, but is besetting Job himself. Next comes the arrival of the three corporeal friends who are spiritual enemies. After that Job, in the absence of all spiritual consolation, curses the day when he was born. Then Eliphaz concentrates the argument of the three friends by narrating his vision of the God of Justice. God is here in the image of Eliphaz and his arms are bound by his own law. Next, the Accuser, whom Job had sent against his sons, comes upon him from the outside, personified by the three friends. His wife crouches by his side and touches him with her right hand in token of sympathy,* but he takes no notice of her. In the eleventh design, God, revealing himself as Satan by his cloven hoof, but still in Job's image, swoops down upon him in the coils of the serpent of materialism, and points to the stone tables of the law in his heaven. Next comes Elihu, who brings instead of false sympathy sympathy that opposition which is true friendship. He is indignant because Job does not submit himself to the decrees of his God, Urizen, the "starry king". Job, strengthened in spirit, can now pass into the last state of the Seven Eyes of God, Jesus. God, typifying this state, descends from heaven in a whirlwind to answer Job's appeal. The friends abase themselves in terror, but Job and his wife can behold his face. The other six Eyes of God are depicted in the margin, and one of them stretches out his hand towards another figure which is just rising: this is the "shadowy eighth", Job's eternal individuality, now ready to join the rest. The fourteenth design, which belongs also to the seventh state, Jesus, "When the morning Stars sang together, and all the Sons of God shouted for joy", is Blake's best-known work. God, the poetic genius, is in the centre, and under his immediate control Apollo drives the horses of Intellect, and Diana guides the dragons of Desire. The other Zoas, body and spirit, are symbolized by the group on earth and by the line of angels above, endless, thanks to Blake's afterthought in adding the arms of others to right and left, which appear in the engraving only: this addition is a recurrence to one of Blake's designs for the Night Thoughts. In the next invention God is explaining the world of nature, in which Pitt's Behemoth and Nelson's Leviathan reappear. Then Job's Error is cast out at a Last Judgment. As Blake had said some years before, "Whenever any Individual Rejects Error & Embraces Truth, a Last Judgment passes upon that Individual." Satan, Error, is cast out, and with him the embodied errors of Job and his wife fall into the pit of annihilation. They look on in calm thankfulness, while their friends on the other side are terrified. In the design which follows Job and his wife are with God above the cloud, and he is blessing them. The friends, still in the material world, have turned their backs, unable to bear the light. The contrast recalls the lines in the "Auguries of Innocence":

God Appears, and God is Light
To those poor Souls who dwell in Night,
But does a Human Form Display
To those who Dwell in Realms of day

Blake

Blake had told Crabb Robinson that Jesus is the only God, "And so am I and so are you", and the texts below are evidently intended to identify God with Jesus, and with Job, who has now cast out spiritual error

Then Job, in the cruciform attitude of self-sacrifice, prays for the friends whom he has forgiven. The cubical altar and pyramidal flame probably symbolize body and soul, a refinement on the water colour in which the irregular flame is cut off by the top of the drawing. The palette, brushes, and scrolls in the margin recall the sentence on the Laocoon print "Prayer is the Study of Art", perhaps also Blake intended to show that he had himself forgiven those who had slighted him as an artist. The next design shows Job and his wife receiving their neighbours, who are loaded with offerings, signifying that Job has now learnt to accept as well as to give. In that which follows, Job is telling his daughters of the state of Experience, pointing to panels on the wall which illustrate it. The tessellated floor, with intersecting circles bounded by one great circle, doubtless symbolizes the perfect spiritual relation of men to one another and to God.

It has been suggested that Job's daughters, who were not involved in the disaster of their brothers, since the number of the women in the third illustration shows them to be intended for wives or concubines and not the three sisters, may symbolize the three modes of art, but there is no definite indication of this either here or in the next design. The last invention is in marked contrast to the first. The sun rises and the family are joyfully making music: two of the daughters are singing from scrolls, light in the hand, but the heavy books of holiness which define and restrain have disappeared.

Among the new friends whom Blake owed to Linnell were Mr and Mrs Aders of Euston Square. Mrs Aders, a beautiful and gifted woman, was a daughter of Raphael Smith, the mezzotint engraver. She married a wealthy merchant of German extraction, who had acquired a remarkable collection of early Italian, Flemish, and German paintings, which he was obliged to part with later as the result of business reverses. The Aders were hospitable, delighting delighting in the society of artists and literary men, and Mrs Aders, who lived till old age, always retained an affectionate memory of Blake. At their house in 1825 he met Crabb Robinson, journalist and barrister-at-law, and, like his hosts, a friend of Wordsworth, Coleridge, and Lamb. Although not personally acquainted with him hitherto, Robinson had been interested in Blake since the appearance of Dr Malkin's book, and in the spring of 1810 he chose Blake as the subject for an article in the Vaterländisches Museum. It was translated by Dr Julius, who was particularly successful in his rendering of "The Tyger". The original has not been found among the Crabb Robinson papers, but the article has been retranslated from the German by Mrs Esdaile in The Library, July, 1914. The first paragraph shows the spirit in which Robinson approached his task, and was later to approach Blake himself.

Of all the conditions which arouse the interest of the psychologist, none assuredly is more attractive than the union of genius and madness in single remarkable minds, which, while on the one hand they compel our admiration by their great mental powers, yet on the other move our pity by their claims to supernatural gifts. Of such is the whole race of ecstasies, mystics, seers of visions and dreamers of dreams and to their list we have now to add another name, that of William Blake.

In his Reminiscences he is more explicit, as he speaks of "writing an account of the insane poet & painter engraver, Blake". After some reference to Blake's early life, for which Malkin was no doubt his authority, Robinson discusses his paintings and engravings, quoting excerpts from the Descriptive Catalogue, which he regards as "a very curious exposure of the state of the artist's mind". He has one anecdote of Blake which does not appear elsewhere.

He told a friend, from whose mouth we have the story, that once when he was carrying home a picture which he had done for a lady of rank, and was wanting to rest in an inn, the angel Gabriel touched him on the shoulder and said "Blake, wherefore art thou here? Go to, thou shouldst not be tired." He arose and went on unwearied.

The greater part of the Poetical Sketches are dismissed as "singularly rough and unattractive," but "there is a wildness wildness and loftiness of imagination in certain dramatic fragments which testifies to genuine poetical feeling" "To the Muses" is quoted with the ambiguous comment that it "may serve as a measure of the inspiration of the poet at this period"

Though he regards some of the Songs of Innocence as "excessively childish" and the Songs of Experience as metaphysical riddles, he accords more praise than censure, and his interpretation of "The Garden of Love" shows insight and sympathy

The following Song of Experience probably represents man after the loss of his innocence, as, bound by the commandment and the priests its servants, he looks back longing to his earlier state, where before was no commandment, no duty, and nought save love and voluntary sacrifice

Europe and America, the only two of the symbolic books which he had come across, are frankly too much for him, he is doubtful whether they are intended for prose or verse He concludes that in Blake

all the elements of greatness are unquestionably to be found, even though those elements are disproportionately mingled

The article is the most appreciative and careful estimate of Blake as poet and painter which appeared during his lifetime

In the interval between writing of Blake and meeting him at the Aders', Crabb Robinson had heard Southey and Flaxman talk about him, and had read some of his poems to Wordsworth, who "was pleased with some of them and considered B[lake] as having the elements of poetry a thousand times more than either Byron or Scott" In 1825 he added that Wordsworth had said after reading a number of the Songs of Innocence and of Experience "There is no doubt this poor man was mad, but there is something in the madness of this man which interests me more than the sanity of Lord Byron and Walter Scott!"

It is clear, therefore, that Crabb Robinson had made up his mind before seeing Blake that he was mad when they met on the 10th December 1825 he seems surprised that that his mental condition was not more obvious In his Diary he asks "Shall I call him Artist or Genius or Mystic or Madman? Probably he is all," and he adds in the Reminiscences

He had a broad, pale face, a large full eye with a benignant expression, at the same time a look of languor except when excited, & then he had an air of inspiration, but not such as without a previous acquaintance with him, or attending to what he said, would suggest the notion that he was insane There was nothing wild about his look and though very ready to be drawn out to the assertion of his favourite ideas, yet with no warmth as if he wanted to make proselytes

Robinson himself was puzzled by his own interest in mystics "It is strange," he says in his Diary, "that I, who have no imagination, nor any power beyond that of a logical understanding, should yet have great respect for the mystics " Unfortunately he exercised his logical understanding in trying to isolate Blake's metaphysical doctrines from what he regarded as the insane expression of them, in order that he might classify them, and he finds it "hard to fix Blake's station between Christianity, Platonism and Spinozism " There were, sometimes, congenial moments as when, for example, Robinson expressed the view that an immortal being could not be created "His eye brightened on my saying this And he eagerly concurred 'To be sure it is impossible We are all co-existent with God, Members of the Divine body We are all partakers of the divine nature ' " Robinson could deal comfortably with this since Blake had but "adopted an ancient Greek idea Qy of Plato "

But Blake's talk of visions and voices, and "the same half crazy crochets about the two worlds" made him feel that "there being really no system or connection in his mind, all his future conversation will be but varieties of wildness and incongruity " For this reason he tantalizes us by imperfect accounts of his later interviews He pleased Blake by seeming to assent to his statement that all men possess in some degree the faculty of vision, had he not presupposed insanity he might have genuinely accepted this view, contenting himself with a psychological analysis of Blake's visionary experiences which would have led him, like Linnell, to a less extreme conclusion As it is he defends himself for thinking it worth while to record Blake's sayings on the ground that he was not a mere madman, but a mono-maniac Robinson's interlocutions were evidently conducted in a kindly and conciliatory spirit, he never tried to provoke Blake, and he never obtruded his own opinions, but he sometimes notes that Blake had made no reply to his observations. He remarks with disapproval that Masquerier, an acquaintance of longer standing than himself, commented on Blake's opinions "as if they were those of a man of ordinary notions," and doubts "whether Flaxman sufficiently tolerates Blake." His own policy was to humour the mental case, and this was doubtless obvious enough to the patient, who demanded opposition from his friends. What did Blake think of Robinson? Did he confide to Mrs. Blake that the visitor was a good creature, but something of a bore?

Yet in spite of this mutual want of sympathy Crabb Robinson has given by far the most detailed and convincing report of Blake's conversations. His account has been already quoted as explaining passages in the poems, but Blake's talk with Voltaire and his refusal to be floored by the astute barrister are too characteristic to omit.

"he understands by the Bible the spiritual sense. For as to the natural sense, that Voltaire was commissioned by God to expose. I have had much intercourse with Voltaire and he said to me I blasphemed the Son of Man it shall be forgiven me. But they (the enemies of V[oltaire]) blasphemed the Holy Ghost in me. And it shall not be forgiven them." I asked in what language Voltaire spoke. He gave an ingenious answer. "To my sensations it was English. It was like the touch of a musical key. He touched it probably French, but to my ear it became English!"

Crabb Robinson's description of the Blakes' home in Fountain Court must be discounted, he and his friends were all in comparatively easy circumstances, and he doubtless failed to perceive the gulf set between simplicity and squalor.

He was at work engraving in a small bedroom, light & looking out on a mean yard—everything in the room squalid, & indicating poverty except himself. And there was a natural gentility about, & an insensibility to the seeming poverty which quite removed the impression. Besides, his linen was clean, his hands white & his air quite quite unembarrassed when he begged me to sit down, as if he were in a palace. There was but one chair in the room besides that on which he sat. On my putting my hand to it, I found that it would have fallen to pieces if I had lifted it. So, as if I had been a Sybarite, I said with a smile, "Will you let me indulge myself?" And I sat on the bed and near him. And during my short stay there was nothing in him that betrayed that he was aware of what to other persons might have been even offensive, not in his person, but in all about him.

His wife I saw at this time, & she seemed to be the very woman to make him happy. She had been formed by him. Indeed otherwise she could not have lived with him. Notwithstanding her dress, which was poor & dirty, she had a good expression in her countenance—and with a dark eye, had remains of beauty in her youth.

Gilchrist read this passage from the Reminiscences which Robinson had lent him to Samuel Palmer, who wrote on 3rd May 1860

Late as we parted last night, I awaked at dawn with the question in my ear, Squalor—squalor? Crush it, it is a roc's egg to your fabric. It gives a notion altogether false of the man, his house, and his habits.

No, certainly,—whatever was in Blake's house, there was no squalor. Himself, his wife, and his rooms, were clean and orderly, everything in its place. His delightful working corner had its implements ready—tempting to the hand. The millionaire's upholsterer can furnish no enrichments like those of Blake's enchanted rooms.

George Richmond, more than fifty years after Blake's death, thus described the arrangement of the room which had impressed Crabb Robinson so unfavourably.

The fire-place was in the far right-hand corner opposite the window, their bed in the left hand, facing the river, a long engraver's table stood under the window (where I watched Blake engrave the Book of Job. He worked facing the light), a pile of portfolios and drawings on Blake's right near the only cupboard, and on the poet-artist's left—a pile of books placed flatly one on another, no bookcase.

In reply to the question whether there were many pictures on the walls Richmond answered "No, not many in the workroom but a good number in his show-room, which was rather dark."

On the other hand Crabb Robinson's description of Blake's amiability and charm of manner confirms all that his younger friends say of him. He was anxious to bring Blake and Wordsworth together, but there is no evidence that they ever met. Blake annotated some of the poems lent to him by Crabb Robinson, and also gave him some notes

notes on The Excursion. These must be read with Crabb Robinson's Diary and Reminiscences and his letter to Dorothy Wordsworth, as, taken by themselves, they scarcely do justice to Blake's profound admiration for Wordsworth, whom he held to be "the greatest poet of the age." He was overwhelmed by the "Ode on the Intimations of Immortality," which Robinson read aloud to him.

I had been in the habit when reading this marvellous Ode to friends, to omit one or two passages, especially that beginning

But there's a tree, of many one lest I shd be rendered ridiculous, being unable to explain precisely what I admired—not that I acknowledged this to be a fair test. But with Blake I cd fear nothing of the kind, & it was this very Stanza wh threw him almost into a hysterical rapture. His delight in W's poetry was intense. Nor did it seem less notwithstanding by the reproaches he continually cast on W for his imputed worship of nature, wh in the mind of Blake constituted Atheism.

The first passage which Blake had noted in the Excursion brought on an attack of illness because he gained from it the impression that the "only poet of the age" felt himself superior to God, and was therefore no Christian in Blake's sense. In the annotations to the poems he quotes Wordsworth's own rendering of Michael Angelo's sonnet, a part of which he inscribed about the same time in William Upcott's autograph album, to prove that "W must know that what he writes valuable is not to be found in Nature." He condemns the Prefaces, excepting the close of the supplementary Preface, as the opinions of a "landscape painter." "Imagination is the divine vision not of the World, or of Man, nor from Man as he is a natural man, but only as he is a spiritual Man. Imagination has nothing to do with memory."

The main cause of offence is doubtless Wordsworth's use of the word "imagination" as signifying merely the creative faculty, for Blake imagination was the cornerstone of his religion, the Divine Body, the Mystic Word which alone had power to dispel error and reveal eternal truth. Coleridge and he would have agreed, perhaps did agree, that Wordsworth was no true mystic.

I will not conceal from you [writes Coleridge] that this inferred dependency of the human soul on accidents of birth-place and abode, together with the vague, misty, rather than mystic, confusion of God with the world, and the accompanying nature-worship, of which the asserted dependence forms a part, is the trait in Wordsworth's poetic works that I most dislike as unhealthful, and denounce as contagious, while the odd introduction of the popular, almost the vulgar, religion in his later publications (the popping in, as Hartley says, of the old man with a beard), suggests the painful suspicion of worldly prudence—at best a justification of masking truth (which, in fact, is a falsehood substituted for a truth withheld) on the plea of expediency—carried into religion. At least it conjures up to my fancy a sort of Janus head of Spinoza & Dr Watts, or "I and my brother the dean"

Coleridge had read the Songs of Innocence and Experience in 1818 when Charles Augustus Tulk, a well-known Swedenborgian, lent him the copy he had bought from Blake. He returns "Blake's poesies metrical and graphic" with some severe strictures on the drawings and a list of the poems elaborately marked in order of merit. "The Little Black Boy" gets top marks, and several are highly commended. Much as he admires "Infant Joy" he wishes to amend the last lines "For a babe two days old does not, cannot smile, & innocence and the very truth of Nature must go together. Infancy is too holy a thing to be ornamented." "A Little Girl Lost" he would have omitted "not for the want of innocence in the poem, but from the too probable want of it in many readers." He is perplexed by "The Little Vagabond".

yet still I disapprove the mood of mind in this wild poem so much less than I do the servile, blind-worm, wrap-rascal, scurf-coat of fear of the Modern Saint (whose whole being is a lie to themselves as well as to their brethren), that I should laugh with good conscience in watching a Saint of the new stamp, one of the first stars of our Eleemosynary advertisements, groaning in the windpipe¹ and with the whites of his eyes upraised at the audacity of this poem!

In 1826 Crabb Robinson tells Dorothy Wordsworth that Coleridge has visited Blake "and I am told talks finely about him," but we catch no echo of this talk. The only account of their meeting is in a critical review of Cunningham's Life of Blake by an anonymous writer in the London University Magazine for 1830, who adds in a footnote "Blake and Coleridge, when in company, seemed like congenial beings of another sphere, breathing for a while on on our earth, which may easily be perceived from the similarity of thought pervading their works ”

The writer does not attempt to report the dialogue, or was it rather the two monologues?

No meeting between Lamb and Blake is recorded, but Lamb also knew some of the Songs. He had heard “The Tyger” recited and speaks of it to Bernard Barton as “glorious,” adding that “the man is flown, whither I know not—to Hades or a Mad House. But I must look on him as one of the most extraordinary persons of the age.” Lamb, it must be remembered, was present when Southey described Blake as the mad author of a mad poem. The reciter of “The Tyger” was probably Crabb Robinson, whose performance at the Aders’ so much impressed Linnell that he used to imitate it.

The “Chimney Sweeper” Lamb sent to James Montgomery for insertion in The Chimney Sweeper’s Friend, and Climbing Boy’s Album, altering “Tom Dacre” in the fifth line to “Tom Toddy.” He considers Blake’s “the Flower of the set,” but deprecates Montgomery’s awkward paraphrase of the “Dream.”

Bernard Barton, the Quaker poet, to whom Lamb’s letter about Blake is addressed, was another admirer to whom Blake was unknown personally. After Blake’s death Barton wrote a sonnet prefaced by Cunningham’s exaggerated reference to “a miserable garret and a crust of bread,” and dedicated it to Linnell. This elicited the interesting letter already quoted in which Linnell describes Blake’s circumstances and his own relations to him.

Another friend of Lamb and Crabb Robinson, Edward Fitzgerald, may have heard of Blake in his school days at Bury St Edmonds under Dr Malkin. He bought a copy of the Songs of Innocence in 1833, and his comments show that he had heard of the visionary heads and accepted the view of Blake’s mental condition current in his own set. Walter Savage Landor did not apparently know the poems till later. His biographer says that in 1836 he picked up some volumes in Bristol by which he was “strangely fascinated,” and proposed to make a collection of Blake’s work, a project which came to nothing.

“He protested that Blake had been Wordsworth’s prototype type, and wishes they could have divided his madness between them, for that some accession of it in the one case, and something of a diminution of it in the other would very greatly have improved both "

Crabb Robinson read some of the Songs of Innocence and of Experience to Hazlitt in 1827, who thought them "beautiful, and only too deep for the vulgar," but added "He is ruined by vain struggles to get rid of what presses on his brain, he attempts impossibilities "

Bulwer Lytton wrote in 1835 with admiration for Blake's verse and engravings, speaking of his "delightful vein of madness "

It would seem then that Blake's literary contemporaries found his poems strange, disturbing, beautiful, and the readiest solution of their own perplexity was to call him a genius, but insane To-day, when everyone is familiar with Blake's Songs in anthologies or in selections from his own verse, the timid and ambiguous acceptance of them by his distinguished contemporaries comes as a surprise, but Wordsworth and Coleridge, Keats and Shelley have been, in truth, precursors of Blake's influence and fame Educated by them, readers are prepared to perceive at once the beauty of his Songs, even when his mystic doctrine escapes them

Artists were more ready to accord unqualified recognition during Blake's lifetime, and this not only because his paintings and engravings were more accessible than his poems Those who, in the course of their own professional work, were accustomed to visualize their memories and their conceptions, were less likely to be disturbed by Blake's assertion of his visionary powers Moreover, a number of them knew the man familiarly in casual daily intercourse Their opinions are, therefore, more responsible Flaxman found him provokingly neglectful of his worldly interests and difficult to help, but the intolerance, of which Crabb Robinson complains, is in itself a proof that he did not imagine himself to be dealing with a madman J T Smith begins his Biographical Sketch by indignantly dismissing the suggestion, while Cunningham though he makes the most of Blake's eccentricities and deplores his excess of imagination, does not hint at

insanity Linnell found him able and willing to give a reasonable explanation of his paradoxes and experiences James Ward and Cornelius Varley emphatically denied that he was mad The boy artists for whom the two rooms in Fountain Court became the "House of the Interpreter" are equally explicit their testimony will be given later

CHAPTER IX

OLD AGE

*But when once I did descry
The Immortal Man that cannot Die,
Thro' evening shades I haste away
To close the Labours of my Day*

BLAKE's letters to Linnell from 1824 onwards contain many references to his failing health. He suffered from periodical rigors, which he describes as "shivering fits" and "this abominable ague or whatever it is," and later from jaundice, both symptoms of gall-stones, the disease which caused his death. Linnell had taken lodgings at North End, Hampstead, for his wife and children in 1822 and again the following year. In 1824 he rented permanently one end of the Home Farm on the Wylde's Estate, the property of Eton College, living there himself, but retaining the old home in Cirencester Place as a studio.

Blake's intercourse with him was not interrupted by the move to Collins' Farm, so called after the dairyman tenant. Linnell was sometimes entertained in Fountain Court before a journey to the provinces, and Blake would see him off. He gives an amusing description of one such occasion when, absorbed in conversation with Linnell and another passenger, he started involuntarily for Gloucester Sunday expeditions to North End took the place of the long walks south of the Thames which had been his delight in his younger days, and this in spite of his firm persuasion that Hampstead was inimical to his health. He writes to Linnell on the 1st February 1826 that he is unable to visit them.

For I am again laid up by a cold in my stomach, the Hampstead Air, as it always did, so I fear it always will do this, Except it be the Morning air, & That, in my Cousin's time, I found I could bear with safety & perhaps benefit. I believe my Constitution to be a good one, but it has many peculiarities that no one but myself can know. When I was young, Hampstead, Highgate, Hornsea, Muswell Hill, & even Islington & all places North of London, always laid me up the day after, & sometimes two or three days, with precisely the same Complaint, & the same torment of the Stomach, Easily removed, but excruciating while it lasts & enfeebling for some time after Sr Francis Bacon would say, it is want of discipline in Mountainous Places Sr Francis Bacon is a Liar No discipline will turn one Man into another, even in the least particle, & such discipline I call Presumption & Folly I have tried it too much not to know this, & am very sorry for all such who may be led to such ostentious Exertion against their Eternal Existence itself, because it is Mental Rebellion against the Holy Spirit, & fit only for a Soldier of Satan to perform

But foolish as Sir Francis Bacon's repressive arguments might be, the attractions of North End prevailed Years before he had marked Lavater's Aphorism, "Keep him at least three paces distant who hates bread, music, and the laugh of a child," "The best in the book!" And now there were children at Collins Farm watching for his signal He was interested in their childish drawings, and once showed them an old sketch-book of his own containing a lifelike grasshopper He used to tell them stories, sterling stuff if we may judge by a surviving nursery rhyme

The sow came in with the saddle,
 The little pig rocked the cradle,
 The dish jumped o' top of the table
 To see the brass pot swallow the ladle
 The old pot behind the door
 Called the kettle a blackamoor
 "Odd bobbys," said the Gridiron, "Can't you agree?"
 I'm the head constable, bring them to me "

And the music was there too Mrs Linnell moved him by her rendering of Scottish melodies, and, in return, he still, as long ago in Mrs Mathew's drawing-room, would chant his songs to tunes of his own making With the same filial kindness which marked her husband's relation to Blake, Mrs Linnell used to wrap him in a shawl on cold evenings, and send the servant with a lantern to light him across the heath During the summer of 1826 the Blakes spent some days at Hope Cottage, North End, a former lodging of the Linnells They drove up luxuriously in a cabriolet as Blake had been suffering from piles, and compared himself in one letter to "a young Lark without feathers," saying in the next that he is "only bones & sinews, All strings & bobbins like a Weaver's Loom "

Among

Among Linnell's artist friends, besides John Varley, his brother Cornelius, and brother-in-law Mulready, were Holmes, Byron's pet portrait-painter, Richter, an ardent student of Kant, and the correct Collins, who cut Blake carrying his pint of porter in the Strand. Constable may have been also an occasional visitor, as there is a tradition that Blake, seeing a drawing of fir trees on Hampstead Heath in one of Constable's sketch-books, exclaimed "Why, this is not drawing, but inspiration" to which Constable characteristically replied "I meant it for drawing." But it was the younger generation who lightened the burden of his years by welcoming him as one of themselves. Both in their corporate form as the "Ancients," a group of artists who met monthly for discussion in town and painted in company at Shoreham, and individually, these boys, Palmer and Calvert, Richmond and Finch, Walter and Tatham, took possession of Fountain Court, sought help and advice, and sometimes induced Blake to return their visits. Several accounts have been given of the "Ancients," the "Extollagers" as the Shoreham villagers called them, coining a word as expressive in its way as the "Academinions" of Linnell's landlady. Armed with that new implement the camp-stool, they roamed about the country by night as well as by day, wore strange garments, and recited poetry. Samuel Palmer's father gave up his book-shop and retired to the "Water-house," and on one occasion at least Blake spent a night or two in the village. He joined Palmer and Calvert in a nocturnal expedition to the haunted castle, where the ghost revealed itself as a large snail crawling up a mullion and tapping on the window-pane. Calvert gives an instance of Blake's telepathic power, more striking than his warning to Paine, a divination requiring little more than common sense. While they were at Shoreham young Palmer left them to go up to London. An hour after he had started Blake put his hand to his forehead and said "Palmer is coming, he is walking up the road." The others protested, but after a while Blake said again "He is coming through the wicket—there!" and in another minute Palmer, whose journey had been frustrated by a breakdown of the coach, walked in.

All these young men professed a lifelong devotion to Blake's memory. They were stimulated both by his personality and by his imaginative art, but they were in no sense imitators: none of their drawings has passed as his like those of his earlier friends, Flaxman and Fuseli, Romney and Stothard. To Samuel Palmer Blake's Virgil woodcuts were a revelation: their influence upon his early work is obvious, and after a middle period of more conventional painting, his later drawings and etchings, more particularly his own designs for Virgil, show an emotional quality again reminiscent of Blake. When only fourteen, five years before he met Blake, he had exhibited paintings at the British Gallery and at the Royal Academy. He describes as his first interview a call with Linnell on the 9th October 1824.

We found him lame in bed, of a scalded foot (or leg). There, not inactive, though sixty-seven years old, but hard-working on a bed covered with books sat he up like one of the Antique patriarchs, or a dying Michael Angelo. Thus and there was he making in the leaves of a great book (folio) the sublimest designs from his (not superior) Dante. He said he began them with fear and trembling. I said, "O! I have enough of fear and trembling." "Then," said he, "you'll do."

Palmer had been brought up as a Baptist, though he afterwards became a member of the Church of England. His memoranda after meeting Blake, are a curious mixture of orthodox evangelical language with phrases and sentences of no doubtful origin, such as, for instance

We must not begin with medium, but think always on excess, and only use medium to make excess more abundantly excessive.

Genius is the unreserved devotion of the whole soul to the divine, poetic arts, and through them to God, deeming all else, even to our daily bread, only valuable as it helps us to unveil the heavenly face of Beauty.

Nature is not at all the standard of art, but art is the standard of nature. The visions of the soul, being perfect, are the only true standard by which nature must be tried. The corporeal executive is no good thing to the painter, but a bane.

Palmer seems to have treated Blake's visionary experiences lightly. In a letter published by Gilchrist he writes "materialism was his abhorrence and if some unhappy man called in question the world of spirits, he would would answer him 'according to his folly,' by putting forth his own views in their most extravagant and startling aspect This might amuse those who were in the secret, but it left his opponent angry and bewildered "

He also instances Blake's exclamation when irritated by some scientific talk about the vastness of space "It is false, I walked the other evening to the end of the earth, and touched the sky with my fingers " He found Blake's talk far from monotonous, and the languid manner was apparently reserved for Crabb Robinson In the letter to Gilchrist he says

His knowledge was various and extensive, and his conversation so nervous and brilliant, that, if recorded at the time, it would now have thrown much light upon his character, and in no way lessened him in the estimation of those who know him only by his works He was energy itself, and shed around him a kindling influence, an atmosphere of life, full of the ideal in conversation he was anything but sectarian or exclusive, finding sources of delight throughout the whole range of art, while as a critic, he was judicious and discriminating

In 1875 Palmer wrote a vigorous defence of Blake's sanity

Without alluding to his writings, which are here not in question, I remember William Blake, in the quiet consistency of his daily life, as one of the sanest, if not the most thoroughly sane man I have ever known The flights of his genius were scarcely more marvellous than the ceaseless industry and skilful management of affairs, which enabled him on a very small income to find time for very great works And of this man the public are informed that he passed thirty years in a mad-house!

The opening phrase is significant Blake had taken the excitable boy by storm His religious phraseology had for the time being masked his heresies, and had but heightened the pious ardour which was Palmer's natural attitude toward his art But later on Palmer was disturbed by Blake's writings He advises a friend to read Gilchrist's Life, but disavows "all adherence to some of the doctrines put forth in the poems, which seem to me to savour of Manicheism", he expresses the belief that Blake had been "misled by erroneous spirits," and regrets that "he should sometimes have suffered fancy to trespass within sacred precincts " Yet while advising Mrs Gilchrist to omit parts of the Marriage of Heaven and Hell as likely to scare reviewers and exclude the book from every drawing-room table in England, he makes a pathetic, muddle-minded attempt to explain that not only is it not nearly as bad as it seems, but Blake's real views, though equally outrageous, were completely opposed to those expressed in it

Blake has said the same kind of thing to me, in fact almost everything contained in the book, and I can understand it in relation to my memory of the whole man, in a way quite different to that roaring lion the "press", or that led lion the British Public

Blake wrote often in anger and rhetorically, just as we might speak if some pretender to Christianity whom we knew to be hypocritical, were canting to us in a pharisaical way We might say, "If this is your Heaven, give me Hell" We might say this in temper, but without in the least meaning that that was our deliberate preference

* * * *

His real views would now be considered extravagant on the opposite side to that apparently taken in the Marriage, for he quite held forth one day to me, on the Roman Catholic Church being the only one which taught the forgiveness of sins, and he repeatedly expressed his belief that there was more civil liberty under the Papal Government, than any other Sovereignty, nor did I ever hear him express any admiration for the American republic

He adds in the same letter

If madness and absurdity be synonyms, which they are not, then Blake would be as "mad as a March hare", his love for art was so great that he would see nothing but art in anything he loved, and so, as he loved the Apostles and their divine Head (for so I believe he did), he must needs say that they were all artists

Edward Calvert was a few years older than Palmer, and had been in the navy before making art his profession His stockbroker was Palmer's cousin, John Giles, whose enthusiasm for everything ancient gave the brotherhood its name He denounced modern pictures as too finished "no room to get a thought in edgewise Wretched work, Sir!" and told Calvert of the "divine Blake" who "had seen God, sir, and had talked with angels" Through Giles, Calvert came to know both "The Ancients" and Blake himself His work was already imaginative in character, but he was for a time directly influenced by Blake Some of his woodcuts are surrounded by mystic sentences which reveal their source as clearly as Palmer's

notes Miss Linnell used to relate how Calvert showed her one of his drawings, saying solemnly, "These are God's fields, this is God's brook, and these are God's sheep and lambs" "Then why don't you mark them with a big G?" asked Linnell, who, never himself an "Ancient," was sometimes exasperated by the "real Greeks from Hackney and Lisson Grove" Calvert, like Palmer, went through a conventional period, later he became a romantic Parnassian, painting golden-toned sketches of Greek subjects, idyllic and mythological, which might bear for their legend those early verses of Blake's

We lack not songs, nor instruments of joy,
Nor echoes sweet, nor waters clear as heaven,
Nor laurel wreaths against the sultry heat

Calvert went to Fountain Court, and Blake sometimes visited him and his wife at Brixton His memoirs contain reminiscences of Blake's courtesy and consideration for the feelings of others, and he recalled how Blake, when he felt his energies diverted from his work, would say that "he was being devoured by jackals and hyenas" Calvert retained a most affectionate memory of Blake In his later years he painted a study from one of the Virgil woodcuts, and said, when nearly eighty "I want to take a little pilgrimage to Fountain Court, that I may once more gaze upon that divine window where the blessed man did his work" Although a religious man he was not a sectarian, and does not show the same tendency as Palmer to criticize and condemn what he did not understand His son says that "he made the most tender allusion to the visions and visitations, the ecstasies and wild indignations that made up the Visionary's life" . There was no assumption of occult mystery about Blake. All was a serious reality, yet abnormal and strange to others" Questioned by Gilchrist about Blake's supposed madness he replied "I saw nothing but sanity, saw nothing mad in his conduct, actions or character"

George Richmond, a boy of sixteen when he first met Blake at the Tatham's, went back with him to Fountain Court, feeling "as if he were walking with the prophet Isaiah" Like Palmer he enjoyed Blake's conversation, and he found it possible to argue and disagree as though with a youth of his own age. Once, distressed by a temporary failure in his power of invention, he asked Blake's advice. Blake turned to his wife and said "It is just so with us, is it not, for weeks together, when the visions forsake us?" What do we do then, Kate?" "We kneel down and pray, Mr. Blake." Richmond was at the time more strongly influenced by Blake than any of the others. His early paintings, notably "The Creation of Light," resemble Blake's both in spirit and in technique, but the imaginative phase of his work was short-lived, and he became exclusively a painter of portraits. Richmond, then the only survivor of the "Ancients," showed H. H. Gilchrist a replica of Deville's life-mask of Blake, taken because the phrenologist considered the imaginative faculty specially prominent. Richmond's remarks about the mask are interesting.

That is not like dear Blake's mouth, such a look of severity was foreign to him—an expression of sweetness and sensibility being habitual—but Blake experienced a good deal of pain when the cast was taken, as the plaster pulled out a quantity of his hair. Mrs. Blake did not like the mask, perhaps the reason being that she was familiar with varying expressions of her husband's fine face, from daily observation. Indeed it was difficult to please her with any portrait—she never liked Phillips's portrait, but Blake's friends liked the mask.

Richmond confirms the report of Blake's outrageous saying to "those who did not and never would understand either him or his works." He remarked of the article which drew Palmer's defence "What a strange assertion! I must say, I think Dr. Richardson is more deluded about Blake than dear old Blake ever was about anything himself." "Never," he told Gilchrist, "have I known an artist so spiritual, so devoted, so single-minded, or cherishing imagination as he did."

Francis Oliver Finch had been a pupil of John Varley. His landscapes, though of an imaginative character, are not obviously affected by his admiration of Blake. A Swedenborgian, he was, in Palmer's view, more inclined than the others to believe in Blake's spiritual intercourse. He told Gilchrist that Blake "struck him as a new kind of man wholly original and in all things. Whereas most men

men are at the pains of softening down their extreme opinions, not to shock those of others, it was the contrary with him" Blake's name is not mentioned in Memorials of F O Finch by his wife, although the book contains an account of the "Ancients" A possible explanation of this curious omission is that Mrs Finch regarded Blake as a renegade Swedenborgian

No special record seems to have been preserved of Henry Walter's friendship with Blake, and again, his work bears no mark of Blake's direct influence

Frederick Tatham was the son of C H Tatham, an architect Blake had some previous acquaintance with the father as a copy of America is inscribed "From the author to C H Tatham, Oct 7, 1799" The younger Tatham, a sculptor and miniature painter, does not appear to have known Blake till he was about twenty He wrote a Life of Wilham Blake which is bound up with the only complete coloured copy of Jerusalem, and was published by Mr Russell in 1906 with Blake's letters It is one of the most important contemporary records of Blake, and reference has already been made to it His account of Blake's personality is in accord with those of the other "Ancients"

His disposition was cheerful and lively, and was never depressed by any cares but those springing out of his art He was everything but subtle, the serpent had no share in his nature, secrecy was unknown to him He would relate those things of himself that others make it their utmost endeavour to conceal

And, like the rest, he thinks that many of the reports of Blake's eccentricity arose from his enigmatic replies to idle questions Tatham's genuine respect and affection for Blake are perceptible through his ridiculous verbiage, yet he lies under the suspicion of having wrongfully appropriated and afterwards destroyed some of Blake's manuscripts and drawings Gilchrist says that Mrs. Blake bequeathed the remaining stock of her husband's works to Tatham Linnell wrote an emphatic contradiction of this in his copy of the Life In his Life of Blake, which bears no date but was probably written some years later, though he doubtless made notes for it during the lifetime both of Blake and his wife, Tatham takes up the position that that Blake not only mentioned him on his deathbed to Mrs Blake "as a likely person to become the manager of her affairs," but actually bequeathed to him both manuscripts and pictures. He refers to a copy of the Songs "which work the author of this is now in possession of, by the kindness of Mr Blake, who bequeathed them to him, as well as all of his works that remained unsold at his death, being writings, paintings, and a very great number of copperplates, of whom impressions may be obtained." He also alludes to a bequest from Mrs Blake of Blake's library, and again of all she possessed. Be this as it may, Tatham obtained possession of Blake's effects legally or illegally. It is probable that he destroyed some of the manuscripts, but here again the facts are obscure. Samuel Calvert says that his father, hearing of Tatham's intention, remonstrated, but thinks that in spite of this intervention Tatham had destroyed "blocks, plates, drawings, and MSS." This appears to have been also Linnell's impression. The allegations made by the Gilchristes are rather less serious. Gilchrist states that some of the remaining stock of Blake's works were destroyed after Mrs Blake's death, and Anne Gilchrist, in a letter to William Rossetti, speaks of "the actual Tatham who knew Blake and enacted the holocaust of Blake's manuscripts—not designs, I think, as I have heard from his own lips." Dr Garnett had an interview about 1860 with Tatham, who told him that he had some of Blake's manuscripts which he was selling from time to time, and Mr. Symonds says that Dr Garnett spoke to him of an admission from Tatham that he had destroyed some MSS. There seems little doubt, therefore, that Tatham was responsible for the destruction of some of Blake's papers, but its extent has probably been exaggerated, and it is even possible that some of the lost manuscripts may still be discovered. Tatham became a follower of Edward Irving, that Irving of whom Blake himself has said all that needs saying "He is a highly gifted man. He is a sent man, but they who are sent sometimes go further than they ought." It is supposed that some of his fellow members of the Catholic Apostolic Church induced him to burn manuscripts containing what they considered considered dangerous doctrines, but Carlyle was sure that Irving himself was not responsible. Tatham's own remarks on Blake's writings suggest that he had succeeded in persuading himself that Blake was an orthodox believer, betrayed into doubt only by his controversial pen.

He wrote much upon controversial subjects, and, like all controversies, these writings are inspired by doubt and made up of vain conceits and whimsical extravagances. A bad cause requires a long book. Generally advocating one in which there is a flaw, the greatest controversialists are the greatest doubters. They are trembling-needles between extreme points. Irritated by hypocrisy and the unequivocal yielding of weak and interested men, he said and wrote unwarrantable arguments, but unalloyed and unencumbered by opposition, he was in all essential points orthodox in his belief. But he put forth ramifications of doubt, that by his vigorous and creative mind were watered into the empty enormities of extravagant and rebellious thoughts.

It may be assumed, then, that Tatham persuaded himself that he was only burning the doubts and riddles and perversities into which Blake was provoked by idle opponents, and which Blake, the true believer, would have disclaimed in his calmer moments. There could be no betrayal of the master by one who had never been a disciple.

The contents of Tatham's holocaust can be only a matter for conjecture. A book named Outhoun was offered for sale by Mrs. Blake, after her husband's death, to Mr. Ferguson, a Tynemouth artist. No copy of this work was known either to Gilchrist or Linnell. This is likely to have been one of the works Tatham either sold or destroyed. The reference in the Rossetti MS. to the Book of Moonlight suggests that a work of that name actually existed, but no trace of it has been found. Another book which has disappeared is mentioned by Crabb Robinson.

He showed me his Version (for so it may be called) of Genesis, "As understood by a Christian Visionary," in which in a style resembling the Bible, The spirit is given. He read a passage at random. It was striking.

On this occasion he told Robinson that he had written "6 or 7 Epic poems as long as Homer, & 20 Tragedies as long as Macbeth." Whether these were invented to amaze the questioner, or existed but as conceptions in Blake's Blake's mind, or were sold or destroyed by Tatham, will probably never be known. It should, however, be noted that among Cunningham's additions to his Life in the second edition is the statement that Blake "has left volumes, amounting it is said to nearly a hundred, prepared for the press."

Tatham says of Blake that

His mental acquirements were incredible, he had read almost everything in whatsoever language, which language he always taught himself. It is a remarkable fact that among the volumes bequeathed by Mrs. Blake to the author of this sketch, the most thumbed from use are his Bible and those books in other languages.

Tatham's statement must, of course, be discounted, but Blake had some knowledge of French, Latin, Italian, Greek, and Hebrew. Samuel Palmer writes to Anne Gilchrist that he can give her no help with Blake's French—"W. B. was mad about languages." Some of Blake's French is obviously dog French, used as a joke. Hebrew he quotes fairly often and with unimpeachable accuracy. The researches of students of the symbolic books show that many of his ideas were derived from Oriental, Greek, Mediaeval, and Celtic sources, but there is little indication as to what he actually read, and it is, therefore, impossible to draw the line between the results of study and coincidence of mystic ideas. Books annotated by him have been dealt with in chronological order, as also those to which he alludes in letters or notes, and it may be assumed that he read all the books illustrated by himself. In addition to these the following are known to have been in his possession: Potter's translation of Aeschylus, Chapman's Homer, Walpole's Catalogue of the Royal and Noble Authors of England, Bowles' Sonnets and other Poems, Tragedies by William Sotheby, a copy of the Works of Peter Pindar is also said to bear his autograph. Tatham says that he "was very fond of Ovid, especially the Fasti," and Samuel Palmer that he often quoted the works of St. Theresa and other writers on the interior life, among the latter were probably Fénelon and Mme. Guyon. He doubtless read Law's own works as well as his translations of Boehme, he was familiar with Bunyan, and made twenty-nine water-colour drawings illustrating The Pilgrim's Progress, which which are now in the Crewe Collection His name is among the subscribers to the posthumous edition of Poems by the Rev James Hurdis, D D, Professor of Poetry at Oxford and friend of Cowper and Hayley

Blake, it is clear, delighted in the company of the "Ancients" He had the gift of being happy and of being himself in any society not openly hostile or provocative these boys gave him love and admiration perfect intellectual sympathy he must long have ceased to expect It would be unjust to accuse them of unfaithfulness to his memory They had admired the artist, and well-nigh worshipped the man, but they were not the young men of the New Age to whom he had appealed some twenty years before The seals of his mystic books had never been broken by them, and it is very sure that Blake himself knew this

Blake would have been lonely indeed without Linnell and the "Ancients" Fuseli had died in 1825 and Flaxman followed next year No letters to Fuseli have been preserved and none to Flaxman after the Felpham days, but it would appear from the references to them by Tatham and Palmer that Blake had continued to see something of his old friends Though Fuseli and Flaxman, especially the latter, had found Blake exasperating at times, they were enthusiastic admirers of his art J T Smith says in his Biographical Sketch of Blake that they both predicted "That a time will come when Blake's finest works will be as much sought after and treasured up in the portfolios of men of mind, as those of Michael Angelo are at present"

Farington and Sir Thomas Lawrence had solemnly agreed that Fuseli was an impossible person who could not be safely introduced to their friends, especially the ladies Flaxman had complained of Fuseli's foul language and asked what Blake did when Fuseli swore "What do I do?" asked Blake "Why, I swear again, and he says, astonished, 'Vy, Blake, you are svinging!' but he leaves off himself!" Whether Fuseli rushed into a corner if someone came in whom he disliked, stopped the coach when a proud parent boasted of his daughter's painting on velvet, or wept in the presence of Sir Thomas Lawrence over the beauty of the Farnese Hercules, Blake's serenity was not likely likely to be disturbed. An anecdote told by Cunningham suggests not only that Blake did not mind if Fuseli were "artificially very ill-natured," but also that some of the stories about his visions may have been originally similar pleasantries. Fuseli remarked of one of his productions "now some one has told you this is very fine." "Yes," said Blake, "the Virgin Mary appeared to me, and told me it was very fine. what can you say to that?" "Say?" exclaimed Fuseli, "why nothing, only her ladyship has not an immaculate taste."

Whatever the value of Fuseli's achievements, and he himself regretted that he could not "paint up to what he saw," he, like Blake, had given his life to the cause of imaginative art, his Milton gallery had been a failure and his pictures did not sell. None the less he declared himself to have been a happy man, because he had always been well, and had always been employed in doing what he liked.

Flaxman thought Blake's poems as great as his paintings, but it is not clear how far this judgment comprehended the symbolic books. Would not the Rev John Flaxman, as Fuseli dubbed him, have found The Marriage of Heaven and Hell distinctly blasphemous? Yet it is likely enough that Flaxman, himself a Swedenborgian, was in closer sympathy with Blake's writings than any of his other friends. The Knight of the Blazing Cross, which he wrote and illustrated for his wife, shows his own mystical leanings, as well as Blake's influence in the drawings. Moreover, Blake's verses suggest that Flaxman had known and understood his spiritual experiences while he was writing the prophetic books.

The American War began. All its dark horrors passed before my face Across the Atlantic to France. Then the French Revolution commenced in thick clouds,
And My Angels have told me that seeing such visions I could not subsist on the Earth,
But by my conjunction with Flaxman, who knows to forgive Nervous Fear.

When Flaxman died in 1826 Crabb Robinson, always curious to observe Blake's reactions, tried the experiment of bringing the news himself. "It was as I expected. He had had been ill during the summer, & he said with a smile, 'I thought I shd have gone first' He then said, 'I cannot think of death as more than the going out of one room into another' And Flaxman was no longer thought of He relapsed into his ordinary train of thinking" But Blake's memory was not failing as Robinson supposed, four months later he speaks to his old friend, Cumberland, of Flaxman's death, though perhaps these words also would have seemed casual, callous, or insane to Robinson

Flaxman is Gone, & we must All soon follow, every one to his Own Eternal House, Leaving the delusive Goddess Nature & her Laws, to get into Freedom from all Law of the Members, into The Mind, in which every one is King & Priest in his own House God send it so on Earth, as it is in Heaven

To Linnell he might write "I go on without daring to count on Futurity, which I cannot do without doubt & Fear that ruins Activity, & are the greatest hurt to an artist such as I am" But Linnell had not known, like Fuseli and Flaxman, the hopes and fears, the doubts and disappointments of Blake's youth and prime He was patient and kind, kind in "minute particulars," but he was no mystic, and as years went by he seems to have become more isolated in his angular evangelicism, and the gulf between his views and Blake's widened in his memory In 1830 he had written to Bernard Barton

There is one thing I must mention I never in all my conversations with him could for a moment feel there was the least justice in calling him insane, he could always explain his paradoxes satisfactorily when he pleased, but to many he spoke so that "hearing they might not hear" He was more like the ancient patterns of virtue than I ever expected to see in this world, he feared nothing so much as being rich, lest he should lose his spiritual riches He was at the same time the most sublime in his expressions, with the simplicity of a child, though never wanting in energy when called for

Linnell never altered his mind about Blake's sanity, and was as indignant with Dr Richardson's article as Palmer and Richmond, but the statement dated 1855 found among his papers suggests that Blake's heterodoxy seemed more shocking when seen down the vista of years than in the days of their constant companionship

A saint amongst the infidels, and a heretic with the orthodox With T all

all the admiration [possible] for Blake, it must be confessed that he said many things tending to the corruption of Christian morals, even when unprovoked by controversy, and when opposed by the superstitious, the crafty, or the proud, he outraged all common-sense and rationality by the opinions he advanced, occasionally even indulging in the support of the most lax interpretations of the precepts of the Scriptures

In October 1825 Linnell gave Blake a folio of fine Dutch paper and commissioned him to make designs from Dante and also to engrave them. The arrangement was that he should take his own time over them and be paid by instalments, some of these are acknowledged in his letters to Linnell. The subject of the fifteenth plate of the Gates of Paradise, Ugolino in the Tower of Famine, had been taken from Dante, and it is probable that the head devouring a human figure, which appears several times in the Rossetti MS, represents Lucifer with Judas, but Blake had not hitherto read Dante in the original. With the help of his small Latin he is said to have learnt enough Italian for his purpose in a few weeks. There are several references in his letters to his progress, and to the pleasure he took in his work. His invention showed no signs of flagging, and, had he lived, the Dante illustrations might have been the crowning work of his life, an achievement comparable with the Job. The water-colour drawings, many of which were made while he was obliged to stay in bed, number one hundred and two, and are mostly unfinished, some of them mere sketches. Blake had only engraved seven plates, and some of these were not finished. They were issued at two guineas, and Blake notes in a letter to Linnell that Mr Butts, who had been calling on him, had ordered a proof copy for three guineas, "this is his own decision, quite in Character." One set is painted in water colour, possibly by Mrs Blake after her husband's death, but more probably by Birket Foster, in whose possession it had been.

Gotzenberger, the German artist, who said, on returning to his own country, that he had seen many men of talent in England, "but only 3 men of Genius, Coleridge, Flaxman and Blake, and of these Blake was the greatest," was enthusiastic about the designs, but Crabb Robinson, who who introduced him to Blake, modestly remarks "They were too much above me" He was not, however, afraid to ask whether Blake considered Dante's moral character pure "Pure," said Blake, "do you think there is any purity in God's eyes The angels in heaven are no more so than we" Blake's opinion of Dante can be gathered from his conversation with Crabb Robinson and from the sentences written on some of the designs He thought that Dante had made the same mistake as Swedenborg in believing that "in this World is the Ultimate of Heaven This is the most damnable Falshood of Satan & his Antichrist" Dante was, therefore, like Wordsworth, an atheist in Blake's sense "Dante saw Devils where I see none I see only Good" "He was the slave of the world & time But Dante & Wordsw in spite of their Atheism were inspired by the Holy Ghost" Blake made use of Cary's translation of Dante, and had some acquaintance with Cary, to whom he was probably introduced by Wainewright Cary told Gilchrist that he gave up his preconceived theory of Blake's madness after he came to know him personally, regarding him only as an enthusiast

Blake was also illustrating Genesis for Linnell He had transcribed the text up to the end of the fifteenth verse of the fourth chapter The manuscript consists of two designs for title-pages and eleven pages of text with illustrations The title-pages and some of the leaves are coloured, the text of the latter being illuminated in green W M Rossetti describes six of the designs as follows "1 A Title-page, with God the Father and Son, the four living creatures used as the Evangelical Symbols, and Adam, 2 Similar subject, 3 The Creator, 4 The Trinity creating Adam, 5 The Creation of Eve; 6 God setting the mark upon Cain" Blake interprets the Elohim of Genesis as the Trinity, and the brand of Cain as the kiss of forgiveness The chapter headings also show that his interpretation of Genesis would have been as original and as mystical as his interpretation of Job

It was probably about this time that Blake began a series of illustrations for the apocalyptic Book of Enoch, of which the first English translation appeared in 1821. Five pencil drawings on folio sheets are extant: these inventions, like those for the Book of Job, not only illustrate the text, but are a vehicle for Blake's symbolism.

The only book annotated by Blake during the last year of his life, which has been so far discovered, is the New Translation of the Lord's Prayer published in 1827 by the versatile Dr Thornton. His rendering, intended to check the mechanical repetition of the prayer, is treated by Blake as "a Most Malignant & Artful attack upon the Kingdom of Jesus By the Classical Learned, thro' the Instrumentality of Dr Thornton."

The excerpts printed by Mr Keynes with Blake's annotations do not give the cumulative effect of the worthy doctor's pedantry, or do justice to his notion of God, the Creator, who, "by the mere act of volition, produces substances the most solid," and will only be fully appreciated with the aid of more powerful telescopes.

Exasperated by Thornton's endorsement of Dr Johnson's view that the Bible is unintelligible to the ignorant, and of Byron's comparison of Christ with Socrates as a great ethical teacher, as also by his own description of God as "uncontrollably powerful," Blake reads into the translation all the worst errors of the materialist followers of Urizen, and brings them out into the open in his parody "Our Father Augustus Ceasar, who art in these thy Substantial Astronomical Telescopic Heavens, Holiness to thy Name or Title, & reverence to thy Shadow"—and so forth. Blake's own version of the Lord's Prayer is addressed to Jesus as also the Father and the Holy Ghost, asking that the reign of the God of this World, the Accuser, shall be ended by the forgiveness of sins. The next sentence, which is unfortunately only partly legible, appears to be a prayer for our "own right Bread" and for all things in common without money or tax or value or price, and must be interpreted by the suggestion in Thornton's retranslation of the prayer that he is only occupied with material good, which can be bought, and priced and valued and taxed, and not with spiritual good. Since "Everything has as much right to Eternal Life as God, who is the Servant of Man," God, the tyrant, must also be consumed by forgiveness. This is followed by a prayer for deliverance from Parsimony and from the Natural Man.

If Blake and the worthy doctor, who had indeed raised the devil by saying the Lord's Prayer backwards, gave their accustomed signals some Sunday morning to the watching children from Collins' Farm, the meeting may well have been the occasion for some of Blake's most mystifying utterances, likely to be remembered by Linnell and Palmer in after years as outrageous and blasphemous.

Early in 1827 Linnell, seeing how feeble Blake had become, suggested that the Blakes should look after his house, 6 Cirencester Place, at the upper end of Tichfield Street, where he himself spent the day in his studio, and live there rent free. The neighbourhood would, he thought, be healthier than the low-lying Fountain Court. But Blake could not face the sacrifice of solitude and independence. Perhaps, too, he remembered that he would no longer be able to look up from his work-table and see the Thames through his window "like a bar of gold."

In February he wrote to Linnell declining his offer.

I have thought and thought of the removal. I cannot get my mind out of a state of terrible fear at such a step. The more I think, the more I feel terror at what I wished at first and thought a thing of benefit and good hope. You will attribute it to its right cause—intellectual peculiarity, that must be myself alone shut up in myself, or reduced to nothing. I could tell you of Visions and dreams upon the subject. I have asked and entreated Divine help, but fear continues upon me, and I must relinquish the step that I had wished to take, and still wish, but in vain.

He had a severe attack of illness during the spring as he

he says to Cumberland in a letter of the 12th April

I have been very near the gates of death, and have returned very weak and an old man, feeble and tottering, but not in spirit and life, not in the real man, the imagination, which liveth for ever In that I am stronger and stronger, as this foolish body decays

In the same letter he refers to the card or bookplate which Cumberland had commissioned him to engrave This has the name, "Mr Cumberland," in the centre, surrounded by an allegorical design, on the left an angel with a sickle is swooping down on two boys, one with a snare, and the other flying two birds tied to strings, on the right a figure with a distaff is soaring toward three angels and a child bowling a hoop through the sky. Cumberland did not receive the plate till after Blake's death He sent his son to call on Mrs Blake, and wrote to him later

I suppose by her charging three guineas he had made a new plate instead of the old one, which I sent to be ornamented in the margin

I long much to see what he has done, but if it is ever so trifling take it at her price, as it is the last I shall have on that feeling which I am often forced to restrain

Young Cumberland answers that Mrs Blake had told him that the plate would have been more finished had her husband lived, and that it was the last engraving he attempted Cumberland replies that he shall use proofs from the plate "to spread my old friend's fame and promote his wife's interest by making him thus the subject of conversation, and his works"

Blake's last letter to Linnell is dated 3rd July in it he speaks of a relapse caused by a visit to Collins' Farm the previous Sunday "I find I am not so well as I thought I must not go on in a youthful Style," But, as he had told Cumberland, "the real man, the imagination" was still strong, and he was able to sit up in bed and work on at the Dante designs in the folio book A few days before his death he finished colouring a relief etching of the "Ancient of Days" for Tatham Then, turning to his wife he said "Stay! keep as you are! you have ever been an angel to me, I will draw you" A few days later, 12th August, he died at six o'clock in the afternoon The dying Boehme had asked his son to open the door as he heard strains of distant music William Blake welcomed death with joyful songs, saying to his wife "My beloved, they are not mine—no—they are not mine "

George Richmond wrote to Samuel Palmer a few days later

Catherine Blake did the last offices for her husband, and made the necessary arrangements courageously, and even with a smile He had told her that it was no real parting, and he should always be there to take care of her

Blake was buried in Bunhill Fields In answer to his wife's questions he had replied that he did not himself mind where he lay, but it might as well be where others of his family had been buried, and that he would wish the service to be that of the Church of England Calvert, Richmond, Tatham, and a clergyman brother of his were present at the funeral The grave was not marked by a stone, but the site has been identified

Obituary notices appeared in the Literary Gazette, the Gentleman's Magazine, and the Annual Register The first assumes that readers will know the illustrations of Blair's Grave, and quotes a part of Fuseli's preface Flaxman and Lawrence are also cited as admirers of Blake's work After a melodramatic description of his poverty and physical condition the notice goes on even yet was his eye undimmed, the fire of his imagination unquenched, and the preternatural, never-resting activity of his mind unflagging He had not merely a calmly resigned, but a cheerful and mirthful countenance, in short, he was a living commentary on Jeremy Taylor's beautiful chapter on Contentedness He took no thought for his life, what he should eat, or what he should drink, nor yet

yet for his body, what he should put on, but had a fearless confidence in that Providence which had given him the vast range of the world for his recreation and delight

The article ends by drawing attention to the destitute state of the widow and suggesting assistance for her

The notice in the Gentleman's Magazine contains a fuller account of Blake's work, including the earlier illuminated books, but otherwise is condensed, like that in the Annual Register, from the Literary Gazette

Blake left no debts and no effects except the stock of copperplates, illuminated books, pictures, and manuscripts About a month after his death Mrs Blake went to look after Linnell's house in Cirencester Place, until he moved in the following April to 26 Porchester Terrace After that she lived for a time with Frederick Tatham, taking charge of his domestic arrangements, and then moved into lodgings at No 17 Upper Charlotte Street, Fitzroy Square Princess Sophia sent her a gift of £100 which she returned, saying that there were others who needed it more She supplied her wants by disposing of her husband's work, avoiding, as a good saleswoman should, the display of too large a choice to her customers She also coloured some of the engraved books with Tatham's help, and, to Linnell's distress, finished some of his drawings Linnell, Richmond, J T Smith, and others helped her by sending purchasers Lord Egremont paid eighty guineas for a water-colour drawing of "The Characters of Spenser's Faerie Queen," a companion picture to the "Canterbury Pilgrims," but did not accept Linnell's offer of the Dante drawings Haviland Burke bought several works himself, and also selected a copy of the Songs of Innocence and of Experience and two prints of Job and Ezekiel for Dr Jebb, Bishop of Limerick, who paid her £20 for them Cary purchased a drawing of "Oberon and Titania," and James Ferguson, to whom she offered the lost Outhoun, three or four of the illuminated books Crabb Robinson went to see her at Linnell's house, and bought two prints of the "Canterbury Pilgrims" and asked her to look out some engravings for him Barron Field, who was with him, took a proof of the Pilgrims.

In October 1831 mortification set in as a consequence of a neglected attack of inflammation of the bowels. She sent for Mr and Mrs Tatham and gave instructions that she should be buried in Bunhill Fields, and that the arrangements should be like those for her husband's funeral. She also asked that no one but themselves should see her after death, and that a bushel of slaked lime should be put in the coffin. After bidding good-bye to Miss Blake, she spent the few hours that remained happy and tranquil, "repeating texts of Scripture, and calling continually to her William, as if he were only in the next room, to say that she was coming to him, and would not be long now." She died in Mrs Tatham's arms on the morning of the 18th October. The Tathams, the Richmonds, Denham, a sculptor, and Bird, an artist, attended her funeral.

There is little independent record of Catherine Blake, nor is it needed. No one can understand Blake's life without being aware of the significance of her helpful and faithful figure, nor is it possible to think of him with a different type of wife without loss, even without the utter destruction of the fabric of his life. And what other test is there of a perfect marriage? If the early lyrics show that at first there had been dissensions the greater the victory for love and imagination. Blake's own words but prove that the doubts and mental distress, which had for a time clouded his life, had cast a shadow over hers also, and that they were both the freer and the happier for his renewed confidence in himself. His love for her was no selfish dependence, the love "that drinks another as a sponge drinks water," but that friendship of which he speaks so often as outlasting sexual love. The woman who had signed her name with a cross in the marriage register at Battersea Church had learnt from him, aided by her own love and belief in him, to share his work and to be his constant stay in spiritual as well as in material things. Even when he was away from her in a visionary Paradise, her bodily presence was necessary to him. Her life was one with his.

CHAPTER X

THE TIDE RETREATS

*Hear the voice of the Bard!
Who Present, Past & Future, sees, Whose ears have heard
The Holy Word
That walk'd among the ancient trees*

*Calling the lapsed Soul
And weeping in the evening dew,
That might controll
The starry pole,
And fallen, fallen light renew'*

FROM the lyrics of his boyhood till those last triumphant songs rang through the little room where he lay dying, from the radiant dawn of "Glad Day" till the evening shades fell and the folio book was closed, from the time when the youth flaunted the red cap of revolution till the seer wrote his epic on the eternal liberty of the spirit, Blake had kept the Divine Vision. Fate has decreed that lyric poets die young, but if, passing over as we must the unfulfilled promise of the Everlasting Gospel and those last unwritten songs, Blake's span of lyric life be taken as ending about the time of his return from Felpham, it was not shorter than that of most of his fellows. Some critics will have it that the mystic slowly stifled the poet, but did he not rather guard the sacred fire, when youth had fled and it was burning low, to create in another medium the poem of the inventions to the Book of Job?

Other men, born later than he, had also toiled in building anew the City of Art, some using marble richly veined and handling it with a cunning greater than his. But he had outlasted them all. He was a poet twenty years before Wordsworth had met Coleridge. When he died the inspiration of Wordsworth and Coleridge was well nigh spent. Keats and Shelley were dead; Byron had left the wilderness in which he wandered to give his life for the only liberty he knew. None of these, his fellow labourers labourers, influenced Blake. There is, indeed, no evidence that he knew the work of Coleridge, Shelley, or Keats. Neither did he affect them so far as we know only Wordsworth and Coleridge read any of his poems. Wordsworth he never met, and he probably had but two or three talks with Coleridge. In this there is little to regret. Shelley was the man with whom communion would have been possible and fraught with mutual good. The sympathy of thought between Blake and Shelley has been often remarked. Shelley, as he freed himself from the fetters of Godwin, who was in truth for him Urizen personified, was gradually developing a philosophy akin to Blake's "Imagination is as the immortal God which should assume flesh for the redemption of mortal passion." This sentence comes not from A Vision of the Last Judgment, but from the Preface to the Cenci. And Shelley defends poetry in words which might be Blake's "It is as it were the interpenetration of a diviner nature through our own it strips the veil of familiarity from the world, and lays bare the naked and sleeping beauty which is the spirit of its forms." Prometheus bears his sufferings in the spirit of the Everlasting Gospel, and Jupiter cries

Oh,
That thou wouldst make mine enemy my judge,
Even where he hangs sear'd by my long revenge,
On Caucasus¹ he would not doom me thus Gentle, and just, and dreadful is he not
The monarch of the world?

We may imagine Shelley stretched at Blake's feet listening to a discourse, well seasoned with Proverbs of Hell, on the Fourfold Vision, those Last Judgments when the individual casts out error which he would recognize so readily, the dangers of repressed desire, and the Human Friendship which transcends sexual love. Mary Shelley shivers at the old man's talk while Catherine Blake, in her wisdom, smiles. And Shelley, the lover of Aeschylus and Euripides, the scholar and the Platonist, takes fire at Blake's ignorant abuse of the Greeks. Shelley, truly the young man of the New Age for whom Blake had looked in vain, might have restored the music and sense of proportion which the lonely creator of Giants had lost.

The

The beauty of Shelley, mysterious rather than obscure, makes the wider appeal. But the divine imagination of the two poets is not to be measured by a silver rod, or poured out in a golden bowl. Yet this may be said, that for good and for evil Blake's visionary faculty was the stronger. His intimacy with his own mythological creations gives them a substantiality which Shelley's "figures of indistinct and visionary delineation" lack. The psychological subtleties of Urizen, a possession to those with patience to discover them, are not attempted by Shelley's Jupiter. Enitharmon is richer in suggestion than the lady of the dissolving arms in Alastor, or the intellectual beauty of Asia.

But the abnormal strength of this faculty was in itself a hindrance to perfection. It is the pressure of visionary material that deforms and obscures the symbolic books, and compelled Blake again and again to throw his work aside unfinished. Yet instinctively he made the wisest use of this power. Had he repressed it the balance of his mind might indeed have been lost: he protected himself against its dangers by accepting and availing himself of all that it brought him. ' he sometimes thought that if he wrote less he must necessarily do more graving and painting, and he has debarred himself of his pen for a month or more, but upon comparison has found by no means so much work accomplished, and the little that was done by no means so vigorous.'¹ The vine was unpruned, but would it not have bled to death under the knife? When he was painting and designing, the very relief from the drudgery of engraving no doubt increased his mental excitement, and made it harder to submit to the discipline necessary for the attainment of technical excellence. Yet, although his work as an artist is full of blemishes due, at least in part, to haste and crowded vision, his genius has here been easier of recognition than in his writings. It is the mark of the true mystic that, after his initiation into the mysteries of the unitive life he is impelled in some way to serve his fellow men. Blake's letters after his return from Felpham, his words to Crabb Robinson, and passages in his prose writings, show that he dedicated himself to the restoration of imaginative art as passionately as Teresa and Catherine of Siena to religious or political reform. Tricked and obstructed he seemed to fail, but the originality of his inventions has impressed his fellow artists of all schools, beginning with some of his most distinguished contemporaries, and has gradually won its way with a wider public. The insistence of certain modern critics that he must be judged as an artist and not as a mystic has only increased his reputation.

Of the mystic it is harder to speak. Blake did not offer a new creed for universal acceptance. He had no illusions about the goats and the fools, and no belief in political panaceas. He only knew of individual regeneration attained through doubts and exaltations and sacrifices of self, and of release from the bonds of the material world by a spiritual struggle which tolerated no compromise.

I shd. be sorry if I had any earthly fame for whatever natural glory a man has is so much detracted from his spiritual glory. I wish to do nothing for profit. I wish to live for art. I want nothing whatever. I am quite happy.

The account which he has given of his mental experiences in the symbolic books can only be understood by those who "put off Holiness, and put on Intellect," and are also capable of intimate communion with him, unless spectre and emanation are united in the reader he will reproduce Blake's doctrines in a distorted form. Banish, if you will, the symbolic books from the City of Art, not as mad or meaningless, but to be pondered over in the hermit's cell just outside the city walls. But even so, remember that the man who wrote them had allowed no compromise with the material world to cloud his sight.

"You shall not bring me down to believe such fitting & fitted. I know better & please your Lordship—" he wrote with a youthful vehemence in his Annotations to The Excursion. "Does not this Fit, & is it not Fitting most Exquisitely too, but to what?—not to Mind, but to the Vile Body only & to its Laws of Good & Evil & its Enmities against Mind."

"C'est une étoile très pure et très lointaine dont les rayons commencent seulement à nous attendre," writes

André Gide of Blake The poet and the artist may often have failed to embody his thought and inventions in a perfect form, and who shall be sure that he has read the message of the mystic aright? To recognize and assail the evils of repression, of law and morality, to perceive and denounce the errors of rulers, teachers, employers, and philanthropists, needs less insight and less boldness in our day than in his But all this, he would have said, is nothing without the healing power of constructive imagination the moral judgment must submit itself to the Four-fold, Human Vision "I have never known a very bad man who had not something very good about him" It was through faith in that Shadowy Eighth, the Eternal Individuality of the wanderer through the states of error, that he came to the Forgiveness of Sins which he had once found so difficult, but which in the end he learnt to be the key of Paradise So the old man, whose wish for a little child was that God might make his world as beautiful to her as it had been to him, whose eyes, bright with the visions he had seen, another child remembered all her life,¹ the old man who worked on till the end and died with the gaiety of a saint, had solved the riddle for himself and found his own happiness "If asked," wrote Samuel Palmer to Gilchrist, "whether I ever knew, among the intellectual, a happy man, Blake would be the only one who would immediately occur to me"

When William Blake died the Daughters of Inspiration had again yielded their place to the Daughters of Memory
Once more

The languid strings do scarcely move!
The sound is forc'd, the notes are few!

In 1826 a young poet had written

The disappearance of Shelley from the world, seems, like the tropical setting of that luminary (aside, I hate that word) to which his poetical genius can alone be compared with reference to the companions of his day, to have been followed by instant darkness and owl-season, whether the vociferous Darley is to be the comet, or tender full-faced L. E. L. the milk-and-watery moon of our darkness, are questions for the astrologers if I were the literary weather-guesser for 1825 I would safely prognosticate fog, rain, blight in due succession for it's dullard months ¹

His prophecy was true of more years than the one No voice yet proclaimed a new revelation We might fancy that Los, Time Spirit, and Genius of Poetry, had ordained a solemn pause to honour the death of a beloved son before the current of things resumed its course

For the spent hurricane the air provides
As fierce a successor, the tide retreats
But to return out of its hiding-place
In the great deep, all things have second birth
The earthquake is not satisfied at once

But the poets, when they came, were inspired by the later leaders of the first and greater revolutionary movement, Byron and Shelley and Keats The Pre-Raphaelites indeed hailed the spirit of Blake, but as a bold breaker of idols rather than a master in the art of poetry, Rossetti's amended texts are in the manner of the Mathew Preface

A lonely guardian of the Divine Vision while he lived, the young men of the newer ages have left Blake lonely still. His are not the excellences of a schoolmaster, his genius of its very nature stands aloof and solitary
